WOULD END WARS

John B. Carr, connected with the advertising department of a local newspaper, who served six months in France with the American expeditionary force was strongly in favor of the plain for a league covenant, because he considers it "the only possible way of stopping while the first to run."

The pile of all the differences between nations," he said, "a spirit of mutual self-interest will hold them to gether and prevent any clique from attempting to encroach on the rights of any single nation. Indeed, I believe there is no greater safeguard against interference with national rights than by the creation of an international disputes. This body would suffer."

Edward Greene, a broker, of 208 West 104th street. New York city, was opposed to the league of nations because he believes that in a short time it will interfere with the foreign trade of the Thited States. "Our best opionunity in world trade," he said, "lies in remaining absolutely independent of any alliance with European powers. So long as we are footionse we can go to the markets of the world and meet competition. But if we are bound up with treaties we may be excluded from this or that market on one pretext or another because of the jealousy of the other members of the league."
