A VENGEING BROTHER HAPPY TO FIND A VENGED LIVING

Frank Lambert, Who Enlisted in Twentieth Engineers in Belief That His Brother William Had Gone Down With Transport, Meets Him in France

A TORPEDED transport, death, revenge and a happy reunion in a French camp, mark the story of the two Lambert brothers, of this city, both of whom are now serving in France with the same regiment.

More than a year ago the Tuscania steamed out of New York harbor for France. Upon that transport was Sergeant William J. Lambert, 3723 Ludlow street, this city, of the Twentieth Engineers.

The Tuscania was torpedoed off the coast of Ireland February 6. The news of the disaster brought sorrow to the Lambert family. There at Etalans, with Company 24, Twentieth Engineers:

"I ran into my brother William after serving one year in the advance section. He told me how he was picked up from the water by a lifeboat after the Tuscania went down. He lived in the lifeboat for eighteen hours and finally landed in a place in Ireland whose name he didn't know. He took part in the military funeral of the drowned soldiers until they were all buried. He spent three days at camp with me, and is now serving at a place called Capiteux.

"I am writing this because I promised your reporter a year ago that I would write him if I came across my brother if he didn't die when the Tuscania went down. I am trying to keep my word."

Hurt "Stepping" Into Cellar Perkasie, Pa., March 28.—Mrs. Wilmoughs Kramer forgot carpenters working about the house had removed a flight of stairs to the cellar, opened the door and fell. She was badly cut, bruised and injured internally.
