Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Montgomery to Give Large Dance for School Set This Evening-Ritz Dances to Begin Today.

Much Ham Through Lack of Forethought

THE Robert Learning Montgomerys' dance, long looked forward to by members of the school set around the ages of fourteen, fifteen and sixteen, will be held tonight at Ardrossan, their country place in Villanova. There are to be about 150 guests of the school set about Helen Hope's age. She is the eldest daughter of the Montgomerys, you know, and is named for her mother and great-aunt, Miss Helen Mrs. Montgomery was Miss Hope Tyler. The Charlie Da Costas, Millses and Montgomerys are giving digners before the dance. The Montgomerys are to have twenty-six guests at their dinner, and I believe the other dinners will be quite large, too.

Supper will be served at small tables seating fifteen guests each. it's going to be a mighty pretty affair, and the girls at least are much excited.

ND today we have the opening of the A afternoon and evening dances at the Ritz-Carlton. They are to go on every afternoon and evening, and each week's proceeds are to be handed over to some special charity. For instance, this week the Orthopedic Hospital will be the beneficiary and next week the Chestnut Hill Hospital.

The truth of the matter is that hospitals that never before had to ask for assistance are really in a bad way this year, because their means and ranks were not only de-pleted by the war and war activities, but by the siege of influenza last fall, which actually about emptied their coffers. The demand was so great then that no hospital, doetor or nurse could stop to think whether they could or could not take more patients, and consequently most of the treasuries of the hospitals at least are down to rock bottom, for expense was not spared.

A number of prominent women have decided to get up these dally afternoon and evening dances, and Mme. Eufemia Giannini, the Italian opera singer, will entertain by singing several operatic selections today. There are to be a number of dinners before the dance tonight. Mrs. George Dallas Dixon will entertain, as will Mrs. Howard Graham, Mrs. Stacy B. Lloyd, Mrs. Henry Sulger Jeanes, Mrs. C. Howard Clark and Mrs. Joseph Gazzam. Some one or two women who are interested in the charity of the week will act as chaperon of the afternoon, and today Mrs. Sidney Keith will preside. Something tells me these dances are going to be "the" thing in Philadelphia for a while at least. There's been nothing so really "spiffy" for so long that some of us almost forget how to dance. It will seem almost like a return to the old supper club which Mrs. Hutchison Scott ran so successfully at the Ritz and later at the Bellevue-Stratford when the club grew too large for the Ritz ballroom.

THEY are backed by about every one of importance in town, so what more do you want? The executive committee includes Mrs. Archibald Barklie, Mrs. George Dallas Dixon, Mrs. Joseph 'M. Gazzam, Mrs. Joseph Leidy, Mrs. Stacy B. Lloyd and Mrs. Charles Randolph Wood.

The patronesses are Mrs. Edgar W. Baird, Mrs. Alexander W. Biddle, Mrs. Edward Bok, Mrs. Eaton Cromwell, Mrs. Fitz Eugene Dixon, Mrs. William H. Donner, Mrs. George W. C. Drexel, Mrs. Howard S. Orchestral Instruments Before New Musical Organization

Gives Illustrated Lecture on the

Every phase of the work being conducted William J. Henderson, music critic of the New York Sun, gave a lecture last evening on "The Orchestra and Its Instruments" before an audience that comfortably filled the Shubert Theatre. The locture was the second event of the four meetings of the newly organized Philharmonic Society. Mr. Henderson was introduced by the president of the society, Mrs. Ernest Thomas Toogood, and his address was thoroughly practical. He wisely omitted the vas practical. He wisely omlitted the vast amount of historical data relative to the rigin and growth of the orchestra, which probably would only have resulted in con-iderable confusion in the minds of his audi-ors, and confined himself to describing the character of the instruments. Nine musi cians were present and illustrated the tone qualities of the instruments in the various registers. Those illustrated were the violin viola, cello, flute, oboe, English horn, clart-net, bassoon, horn, trumpet and trombone. The supplemental instruments, such as the contra-bassoon, bass clarinet and others were described and their chief characteristi-

If you don't believe it, ask the weather man, who every year has to sum up March statistics before April's a day old. The days of March change more quickly and more often and with less warning than even the dresses of "wimmenfolks." This month, for instance, was warmest on March 21 with a temperature of sixty-eight, and a few days earlier, on March 14, was coldest with mercury in the thermometer down to twenty-five. And during the last forty-seven years, the weather ranged from five degrees cold in 1872 to eighty-six degrees warm in 1907. The weatherman will make no pre-dictions regarding future Marches. "If I could prognasticate with any degree of cer-dints," said he. "I should have told conting even the dresses of "wimmenfolks" This tainty," said he, "I should have told you long ago when the war was going to end." The mean temperature for the month, that is to say, the average temperature the weatherman would expect every day if he didn't know March, was 40. But March went and totaled up 191 degrees of cumulative excess over the product of this forty degrees and the thirty-one days of the month. And and the thirty-one days of the month. And the fickle month, often termed both lamb and ion, did the same thing with the rain. She tumped out a bucketful with an excess 46 inches, normal for the month being 2.45 nches. She gives the weatherman a lot of trouble loes March. Because he must compute daily and monthly excesses in temperature and rain based on previous computations. He has to do it for every other day of every other month, of course But the other months are not half so skittish as March

Late Motion Picture Magnate's Mother Announces Gift at Birthday Anniversary Celebration

The late Stanley V. Mastbaum, philanthropist, pioneer of a new industry and patron of art, was extolled yesterday at a memorial celebration held at Eagleville, Pa., honor of the anniversary of his birth. Men of prominence, including public off cials, litterateurs and men of industry, who were coworkers and warm friends of Mr. Mastbaum, attended the event to pay him tribute. The scene of the celebration was the sanatorium for tuberculosis patients at Eagleville, which Mr. Masthaum nided financially and for which he devoted his time and talent during his life. It was here that his friends a year ago erected a memorial pavilion in his honor.

Amid great applause, it was announced that Mrs. Fannie E. Mastbaum, mother of the late promoter of the moving-picture in-dustry, had donated a $1000 Liberty Bond to the sanatorium with instructions that the "institution use it as it sees fit." Judge John M. Patterson, a warm friend of the late philanthropist, was the orator of the day. Following the speeches came an entertainment, which was enjoyed by the patients of the institution as well as several hundred distinguished visitors. The program and celebration were arranged by the Stanley V. celebration were arranged by the both which Mastbaum memorial committee, of which Lawrence D. Beggs is chairman. Music was Lawrence D. ACK of foresight was what did it. You see. Husband isn't out of the service yet, and the H. C. of L. doesn't realize that, and consequently whenever anybody tells her that a certain kind of meat or a certain method of buying or anything like that is economical, she falls for it with a low growl and tries it out. So when the butcher the other day inveigled her into believing that it was economical to have a lot of meat on hand, in case of unexpected company or any other emergency, because you really don't have to buy any other meat execept occasionally-and so on. So of course she gave in and purchased a whole end of ham, carted it home with much difficulty-and contemplated in sudden dismay the "two-by-four" kitchenette," in which it was impossible to keep anything larger than a pound of butter. Lack of foresight!

And now, when you see Husband wan dering about with a disconsolate expression on his face when it's time to go home for dinner, and see aforementioned face light up with joy when somebody invites him out to dinner-that's the answer, lack of foresight. They've been having ham, ham and, ham omelette, ham hash ham, sliced ham, even ham and cabbage for weeks to eat it up-lack of foresight. NANCY WYNNE.
