GOSSIP OF THE STREET PRESERVATION OF TRADE BALANCE ABSORBS ATTENTION OF BANKERS

Credit of Nation Last Year Approximately Three Billion Dollars-Europe's Method of Meeting Payment-Gossip of the Street

DERHAPS no subject is receiving more careful study and consideration among bankers and other financiers at the present time than the problems facing a preservation of the balance of trade between the United States and foreign countries, especially the Allied nations which are indebted to us for such huge sums advanced as loans. The interest on these loans alone each year would have been considered a staggering debt before the war, had not the war made us intimately acquainted with amounts represented only by the use of ten figures.

For some time past this column has been in part devoted to the opinions of leading financiers of this city on the subject of foreign credits. These opinions have been ably seconded by Lieutenant Colonel James H. Perkins, vice president of the National City Bank of New York, in an address before the Bond Club of New York on Friday last. Colonel Perkins has just returned from Europe, within the last two weeks, and therefore speaks at first hand. He said:

"Nothing can be done in the way of foreign trade or foreign investment until we have done something in the way of foreign finance. We are in the position of holding a large part of the wealth of the world. We are a very large creditor on every year's transactions. Our credit during the war has been running anywhere from six hundred millions before the war up to three billions, I think it was, in 1917, and approximately three billions last year.

America Must Advance Europe Long Credits Eventually

"It is fundamental that we cannot go on selling to Europe unless we provide some way whereby Europe can pay for what we sell to her. There are only three methods of paying: One, to pay by gold, which is out of the question-she hasn't got the gold; another is to pay by imports into this country from Europe, and the third is to pay by our giving long-time credits to Europe, so that she can re-establish herself. We have got to advance them very large and very long credits eventually.

"Europe owes to us in the neighborhood of ten billion dollars today. We have bought back from Europe of our own securities that before the war were taking to them every year probably two hundred and fifty million dollars in interest. Those are now on this side. So that, roughly speaking, in interest alone Europe has lost during the war the possession of approximately seven hundred and fifty million dollars a year. That is a fixed charge that is right out of them to start with. In addition to that, the depletion of raw materials is such that they must call on us.

"The balance of trade, as I see it, must be in our favor for at least five years to come. I do not know how much. As I say, it was a balance of three billions in our favor in 1917 and approximately that in 1918.

"We are going to finance Europe to a very large extent. We are going to do business with Europe to a very large extent, and we are going to start right in educating our people to that idea. The only way in which we can do busines with them is for our country to become educated to the idea that we will buy European securities when, as and if they are propertly set up, and we can only do business when they are properly set up. America has got to do a very vast financing work for the rest of the world."

Below are given the expressions of opinion on certain matters of importance occurring in the financial world during the last week as they impressed the individual bankers and brokers to whom they are credited: Hecker & Co .- Domestic trade conditions are shaping themselves in a satisfactiry manner and increased activity in virtually all lines is expected. While we shall experience declines from time to time in accordance with either the technical position of the market or news received from abroad, the tendency of the market is upward for the present. 'With the Victory Loan out of the way securities should seek a higher level, particularly in copper, chemical, motor, oil and steel issues.

Butcher, Sherrerd & Hansell-Probably every broker has often wondered why successful merchants and other men and women with surplus money to invest give so little care and thought to their investments outside of their business or profession. If the same time and intelligent thought they give to their daily affairs were given to the stocks and bonds they buy with their surplus money, many millions of dollars would be saved each year. A few moments spent with a careful broker would often repay the man or woman seeking investment several hundred per cent in losses prevented alone.

From a constructive standpoint, the experience and suggestions of a competent broker at this time of change and reconstruction, following the cessation of active military operations, are just as necessary for an investor as are architects and builders for the erection of factories and dwellings.

Chandler Brothers & Co .- Every day the question becomes more generally discussed as to whether it was wise to accept an armistice. Multitudes are now believing that, even entailing a further loss of life, it would have been productive of better results to have definitely defeated Germany on German soil, with nothing less than unconditional surrender. That the victor's position would have been stronger, not merely as to Germany, but also as to Russia and the rest of the malcontent peoples, s absolutely certain. We are now concerned with an army little short of a million Bolshevists, composed of Russians, Hungarlans, Austrians and Bulgarian prisoners of war, released from Siberian captivity, the had people of the world, now marching through Galicia toward Hungary, to foment still further disturbance and add to their own numbers, to in stigate a fresh war under their red banners. Is it any time to be withdrawing and demobilizing troops by the wholesale?

Not that Ludy wasn't a perfectly good a captain, but the new order of things was only part of the general scheme to change the luck of the team, and it also contract, for the team captain has a few extra duties to perform and gets extra pay for them. But that is not all, for Coombs has changed everything about the Phillies. It seems as though the Allied forces should be just as formidable and overwhelming in numbers and ammunition as possible until the rebellious spirit is definitely curbed and peace conditions have been unalterably accepted. There is not a single element of German spirit changed except that arising by necessity from defeat, and if they were able today to make any new alliances with countries north or south of them they would fight rather than accept the terms which should, in all justice, be imposed upon them. No doubt this condition could be successfully resisted by the Allied armies as they were last November, but it is a serious question, the continual weakening of these forces by large withdrawals of English, French and American troops and their return to civilian life.

Franklin National Bank-Nothing startling appears from an analysis of the business operations of the country during February, the current operations for March and the prospective operations for April. The transition of business to a peace basis is going forward with few serious jolts or hitches. Released and available labor is being absorbed faster than we had any right to expect and the danger of a great surplus of idle labor is growing less. Except for labor strikes, the number of idle workers in the country is no farger than we have had on five different occasions during the last ten years.

The volume of general business is somewhat less and the average of commodity prices shows some recession. There has been no unreasonable decline in production, in shipments or in prices of any important item of commerce

Edward B. Smith & Co .- Prices of stocks continue to exhibit strength and active trading is noticeable in many specialties. Copper stocks appear to have been well liquidated, which may also be said of steel stocks, and new business is reported to be developing among these companies. It is believed that the railroad situation will gradually become adjusted and that holders of first-class railroad securities have good reason to feel confidence in their investments. Generally speaking, the situation is becoming more favorable, and it is thought that considerable activity may be expected, particularly in various specialties.
