MOVE TO BOOST SALARIES OF PENN STAFF IS STARTED

Faculty Stirred by Professor's Resignation, Impelled by "Starvation Wages"

DR. J. RUSSELL SMITH ACCEPTS COLUMBIA POST

Wharton School Chief Bemoans Low Pay of Assistant Instructors

A movement has been started to procure higher salaries for teachers at the University of Pennsylvania.

The movement was originated by members of the faculty, and already has the indorsement of several mem bers of the board of trustees. This became known this afternoon after Dr. J. Russell Smith, head of the department of industry and geography at the Wharton School, announced his resignation because of the "starvation wages" paid his assistants.

He took this action, he says, only after exhausting every effort to get Lieutenant Shern Slightly Hurt more money for his assistants, several of whom are paid $1600 to $1800.

Funds for larger salaries were not available, he said, so he accepted an charge of a similar department there, ONE JUMPS TO SAFETY rather than continue at the Wharton School with an underpaid staff.
