To "Hopeful"

The answer to your question will be of such general interest that I am going to make reply through the little daily article in the right-hand corner of the "What Can We Do With the Husband Who Enjoys His Home and Refuses to Go Out?" It always helps to put heads together. "Hopeful," and if we don't establish for you an undying belief in woman's page editors, a least we will perhaps have offered helpful suggestions.

Saves the Question Box

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam-Will you please give me some advice on how to save or keep the questions in the question box and the quiz. The way I save them is by pasting them in a diary. This seems very tiresome. The book isn't very thick and it would be filled soon, and I wouldn't like to have two books of th same thing. Another way that I thought of was to copy all the answers London, April 16.—(By A. P.)— There was an unusual scene in the in a loose-leaf bank book, and if you House of Commons last night. During have not enough paper, you can buy some and just put it in. But this is a discussion of a labor motion on penwasting paper. I would be very much sions two women in the strangers' gallery began shouting, "You are murderobliged to have your advice. S. T.

I think the loose-leaf book would be of all, and I don't see how you would be wasting paper in using it. But I wouldn't copy the questions and answers in, but rather neatly clip them out and paste them in. Arrange your items alphabetically; for instance, have pages for games, beauty hints, little usehold hints, etc., and then might have pages for general information contained in the quiz and classified alphabetically in this way: (a) Information. (b) Information, etc. The advantage in having a loose-leaf note book is that you can go on building your book almost indefinitely. You see, for instance, when you have two pages of (a) Information filled, all you have to do is slip another blank page under (a) and start pasting more (a) and so on with the other items. All you will have to do each night is turn to that letter under which the item you are going to save comes and paste it in. Get a good-sized loose-leaf book in the first place, one with large sheets, as it will be worth the initial expense. I wonder if some of our other readers don't think this a very good idea to save the information that appeals to them in the question corner and the daily quiz. I know many of our readers do save the ings loosely, but it seems to me a book like this systematically kept would be of any amount of interest and value
