

JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Is Struck With the Crowds in the Streets in Connection With the Liberty Loan—She Sees Various Good-Looking Costumes and Hears Much

DON'T you feel as if you were in one of the great cities of southern Italy or France on a gala day instead of in our quiet old Philadelphia? I never saw anything like the excitement in the streets. Why, it's as much as your life's worth to walk along Broad street between Chestnut and Walnut streets, even when there is no sign of a parade. And everywhere you turn you meet a band or hear some one singing a solo, until you are so entertained you feel like buying every Liberty Bond you ever met with.

Certainly the Liberty Loan committee is to be congratulated for the atmosphere it has put over, as it were, if nothing else. It just invites your pocketbook right open, whether you can afford it or not, doesn't it? It does.

I THOUGHT Judith Jennings looked awfully well looking out of the Victory Loan booth at Thirtieth and Chestnut streets yesterday. She is very pretty, with a bright color and light, fluffy hair, and the uniform with the red fixings (she's an E. A. A.) is most becoming. Her brother, Arnold Jennings, has come back from overseas and is carrying a whole lot of wonderful trophies and relics, which he exhibited in a window of one of the Chestnut street shops. I couldn't tell you what was in the collection, because every time I passed the place the crowd around the window was about "three deep," and while that is a lovely game for the very young, it's not exactly appropriate for Chestnut street. But they do say there was one or more of those curious little "beasties" we heard so much about all through the war in the exhibition.

TALKING of exhibitions, I went to the private view on Monday night of the official war pictures of the British Government. There was a very smart receiving line. Mrs. John Caldwell, Mrs. De Witt Cuyler, Mrs. Mason Campbell, Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson, Mrs. Henry Brinton Cox and several others, Mr. Raymond Weyer, who is director of the Worcester Art Museum, is in charge of the exhibition, and he lectured about it yesterday afternoon. He was extremely interesting; and such a knowledgeable one. I saw him at luncheon at the Ritz before the lecture. He and Mr. Brinton were at a table with Mrs. E. K. Price and Jean Bullitt.

The picture that interested me most was that of the young woman who was an Austrian spy. She was wonderfully clever and had pretty nearly every man in love with her, they say. There had been a terrible time for her, but they finally did, and she was shot. Mr. Weyer had a very strange tale to tell of her. His lecture was altogether most interesting.

I SAW Esther Howell Toland yesterday on Chestnut street. She is the most wonderful looking person. She had on a sport suit of a soft green that was just exactly right for her—fact, I suppose that was the reason she bought it; it usually is when people get those just exactly right things, only I think they're awfully hard to find sometimes, don't you? Well, to go back to her. She had a terrible time for her, but they finally did, and she was shot. Mr. Weyer had a very strange tale to tell of her. His lecture was altogether most interesting.

HAVE you ever noticed the different ways people have of appreciating things? For instance, you tell some people that you've had a piece of gossip, something utterly foolish that you have done, something utterly ridiculous that somebody has said—to one person, and she remarks in loud tones, "Ha, ha!" and you feel that she got you. You tell it to some one else and she replies with a rather apologetic smile, "Is that so? How funny?" And then sometimes you meet up with the overwhelming kind that cuts in. "Oh, yes; but, my dear, wait until I tell you what I— and so on. But the kind that fills me with awe and makes me wonder if she really expects to go through life that way is the kind I heard yesterday. Somebody told her an awfully clever story that a youngster made to an elder, and with changing her expression or moving her face from the veil that she was arranging with great care she exclaimed: "Oh, my dear, I adore that—I think that's perfect— I simply love it—I think that's the perfect—my dear, I love it." And if she hadn't been rudely interrupted at that crucial moment she would be singing that mountain yet.

Pennsylvania To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—When American called for volunteers to go and fight the Hun, The boys from Pennsylvania Responded on the run; They came from all professions, They came from every trade, Which showed a loyal spirit Of Pennsylvania grade. They joined the army, navy, And soon were over the sea To battle for our freedom And pure democracy. They turned the tide of battle, Put the Germans on the run, And have earned the nation's praise For each Pennsylvania son. They fought for life and liberty, They did their duty well, And of their deeds and valor War history will tell. So let us folks who stayed at home, And did not have to fight, Buy freely of the Victory Loan, And do the thing up right. ROBT STAGG, Member of Typographical Union No. 2.

Paris Plaster Versus Paris Green To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: The Paris Peace Conference is evidently approaching the last stage of its deliberations, and if I am not presently mistaken, the last stage will be worse than the first.

Imperialism and race exploitation that ended as a result of the great war is again raising its head and extending its arms. The old plagues are to continue. Japan is dragging the Koreans, England is to continue dragging the Irish, the Hindus and the Egyptians, while Belgium is to continue civilizing the Congo. Every factor that made for the late war is to remain in an intensified form. Peoples who never did anything for humanity or liberty, but who just happened to be subjects of certain empires, have been raised to an independent status, while other peoples, who, like the Irish, have spent their forces and resources in behalf of human liberty, are to be given only the right of determining what alien government they must live under.

The President told us not long ago that "no power could last, or accept the principle that did not recognize and accept the principle that the consent of the governed." Hence, governments otherwise established will not endure and do not deserve to endure. Assuredly such a government will not endure in Ireland, and if any statesman at Paris thinks he can make it endure by the use of force, then he is tragically mistaken.

If the statesman at Paris ignore Ireland or offer her less than the independence which she claims, then it will be their funeral, not hers. They have to settle the Irish question right or else they settle nothing except their own political fates. PADRAIC LAGAN, Philadelphia, April 21.

Housing and Taxation To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—I read with a great deal of interest in your paper today what you had to say about "A Housing Suggestion." I was particularly interested in this your concluding paragraph:

"The merit in Mr. Hilder's suggestion lies in the fact that it would provide houses built without anticipation of the speculative profit for which the ordinary building operator hopes. Similar housing corporations exist in other cities and they earn a fair return on the money invested, while at the same time providing shelter for families of moderate income at a price within their means."

I believe you would be rendering your readers a very valuable service if you would print some facts about such successful housing corporations now speak about. It would be interesting to know how they

MATINEE MUSICAL SCORES A SUCCESS

Gives Music Drama, With Good Singing, Fine Scenic Effects and Excellent Cast

THE EVE OF ISIS A Music Drama The Cast Mrs. Dolan, who is president of the Visiting Nurse Society, is interested in the dance being held at the Bellevue-Stratford this week for the benefit of that organization, and will be one of the patronesses on Saturday evening.

The Matinee Musical Club gave one of the most ambitious performances of its history last evening at the Bellevue-Stratford, with a success that was due in about equal proportions to good singing and acting, graceful dancing, beautiful stage effects and a sincere enthusiasm which dominated every note and action of both principals and chorus.

The performance was "The Eve of Isis," a music drama, the scenario of which was written by Maude Weatherly Benish, the music arranged and adapted by Helen Polakoff Innes and the stage direction by Mlle. Louise Le Gai. The story briefly is that Isis, goddess of a sacred isle of the Nile, rises from the waters once each year on the night known as the Eve of Isis, and seeks a mortal lover. The day following is given over to a festival in honor of Isis, and any marriage consummated on this day is especially blessed by the goddess. The ancient law makes it necessary for the bridegroom to meditate alone upon this isle on the night before the wedding.

To the island accordingly comes Nebti, king of the Egyptians, who on the following day is to wed Anubis, a princess of the Nile. Isis appears and sings to him, entreating him to go with her. Bewitched, he follows her and leaps into the sea. In the second scene, Nebti is asleep, when trumpets arouse him. He awakes and realizes that it is all a dream and that his bride, Anubis, is about to meet him. The road procession follows, bringing Anubis, who sings of her desire for the immortal Isis, which she responds fervently. The High Priest unites them and the festivities of the wedding feast close the drama.

Mrs. Benish in her scenario carries out faithfully the romantic idea of the Egyptian legend, together with the atmosphere of the ancient days in which the scene is laid. The music has been skillfully chosen by Mrs. Innes, with due regard to its proper place in the drama as well as its total position, both as to voice and instruments. A novel and pleasing feature of the musical setting was the accompaniment of some of the dances of Mlle. Le Gai with both voices and instruments.

The principal parts were taken by Miss Ethel Niehmann (Isis), Mrs. Loda Gerforth (Anubis), Miss Eleanor Moore (Nebti), a son of Isis, and Miss Ann Walker and Mlle. Louise Le Gai (Athore), a court dancer. Miss Niehmann has a high, clear soprano of good range and great precision of intonation, but needing just a little more flexibility, which, however, may have been due to a slight nervousness. Her opening solo and her duet with Nebti were very well done. Mrs. Gerforth has an excellent voice of equal quality and power over its entire register. Like Miss Niehmann, she has a fine stage presence and sang her introductory solo and the succeeding duet with Nebti with excellent effect. Miss Moore had but one solo, in the first scene, when her fine contralto voice showed to good advantage. Mrs. Loda Gerforth who took the only male character of the drama, is too well known for both voice and acting to need extended comment, except to say that he made a personable and thoroughly acceptable Nebti.

No small part of the credit of the performance should go to the members of the chorus, who showed the results of the long and severe training which they have recently had at the hands of Mrs. Innes. It was well balanced, the tone quality good and never forced. Excellent incidental solos were sung by Miss Mary Merkle, Miss Linder East and Miss Anna B. Smith. The solo dances of Mlle. Le Gai were admirable in their grace and skill and were cordially received by the immense audience.

The stage settings were elaborate and beautiful and many a grand opera has been given with less realistic and effective settings. The night effects on the Nile, with the waves breaking in the distance, were especially good, as was the lighting of the stage and the general scenery. The music was furnished by the Matinee Musical Club String Orchestra, with Mrs. Nina Portman Howell at the head of the violins, and Miss Helen Bootbrody at the piano. The stage direction was by Mlle. Le Gai.

I believe if all value which demands government in Wilmington would pay the same tax it would pay to own houses in Wilmington. It may pay to own houses in Wilmington since the war broke upon us, but it did not pay before the war, and the man who would build houses in Wilmington today with the intention of renting them should have a guardian appointed for him.

JOHN S. HAMILTON, Wilmington, April 18.

ZIONISTS LAUNCH MEMBERSHIP DRIVE

Jews of World Are Making Supreme Effort to Show Support of Movement

Zionists intend to start a vigorous campaign for membership throughout the country today. It is felt that now is the time for the Jews of the world to make a supreme effort to show that they are behind the project to build a Jewish homeland in Palestine, a project upon which the Peace Conference is expected to lay its seal of approval any day. There are at present 10,000 registered Zionists in this country, and a drive is to be made to increase the number to 250,000 so that by the time the Zionist congress will be held in June American Jews will show by actual figures that it is heartily in sympathy with the Zionist program.

The campaign in Philadelphia will be waged from the Philadelphia office, 727 Walnut street. The city has been divided into twelve districts and chairmen have been appointed and volunteers are being secured to go from house to house to get members. Mrs. Samuel Schimmel is chairman of the membership campaign. A mass-meeting will be held in the Casino Hall, 717 Dickinson street, on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The speakers will be Rabbi Harry S. Davidowitz, former chaplain in the United States army, and Paul Raskin, the well-known Jewish poet of New York.

AERIAL EXPOSITION DURING LOAN DRIVE

Battle-Scarred Airplanes and Parts of Balloons Shown at Commercial Museum

The battle-riddled wreckage of a dirigible balloon belonging to the Army War Department is one of the many interesting exhibits of naval planes and naval aeronautical equipment to be seen at the Commercial Museum. The exhibit will continue throughout the Victory Loan drive.

There are about fifteen planes in the exhibition, the majority of them made in the aircraft factories at the League Island Navy Yard under the direction of Commander I. E. Cohnen. A few of the smaller planes, including those used in giving lessons to pilots on this side of the Atlantic, were made at the Curtiss plant.

Beside the planes there is a variety of naval ordnance. Machine guns and depth bombs are particular objects of interest. Of local interest is the collection of aircraft parts constructed by Philadelphia citizens, which turned over a part of their plants for that purpose on the outbreak of the war. American and foreign airplane engines are displayed side by side.

Among other types of flying machines in the exhibition was the balloon F. 1, which was used in active service in the North Sea, the 29 B, a monoplane, and the flying boat F. 21, which is equipped with two Liberty motors, a Davis nine-pounder, ten Lewis machine guns and carries two pilots, a bomber, a radio operator and a mechanic. The latter is one of the biggest machines made.

A kite balloon is another interesting feature. This contrivance was towed by a ship to the spot where observations were desired and was then released into the air. It has a small basket, big enough to hold two men.

The dirigible car is of the type known as the Astra Flying Car. It was used by the French up to 1917, when it was turned over to the Americans. The car on exhibition is riddled with bullet holes and gives every evidence of hard usage.

Those who are in charge of the exhibition in the interest of the Victory Loan campaign are Lieutenant Harry R. Cox, Lieutenant A. E. J. Mah and William L. Brown, who superintend the work of assembling the planes at the navy yard.
