

JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Walks Up Chestnut Street and Sees Some Good-Looking Clothes—She Tells of Scout Rummage Sale. Hunting Set to Go to Pimlico Races

BLUE serge suits, with black or dark blue hats and furs, are being worn to a lot this spring, aren't they? I passed two of them yesterday while strolling the crowded Chestnut street, hence the fashion note. But, really, I have seen others, too, quite a number of them. I suppose the reason I was impressed with them yesterday is because they were worn by two such good-looking women. One was Mrs. Butler Reeves and the other was Juanita Harmer Brown.

Mrs. Reeves had on a dark fur with a black straw hat trimmed, if I remember correctly, with fluffy black feathers under the crown and the blue serge suit. Mrs. Brown's suit was a little lighter, so was her fur, and her hat was dark blue straw, turned up in front and adorned with those thin brightly looking feathers. Her young sister, Celestine Warden, is to be one of next year's debs, I hear. She was really in the debutante set last year, but lots of girls are going to have their formal parties this year, for there seem really no formal debuts at all last winter, even after the armistice.

I saw Betty Warden, the youngest sister, at dancing class the other night. She is such a pretty little thing and she had on a white dress with long neck and short sleeves and a wide blue sash, with a blue ribbon on her short hair, and she looked sweet.

Did you know that everybody on the Main Line is going to Baltimore on Friday to the Pimlico races? The John R. Valentines, Mrs. Clarence Dolan, Mrs. Alexander Brown, the W. Plunkett Stewarts, the Billie Clothiers, the Robert Stricklandes, Mrs. Victor Mathew (she has just been to the show at Brooklyn, you know), and Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Mather (they have just come back, too, from the Green Spring races, at Baltimore), the William du Ponts, and a lot of others. And the R. Penn Smiths are coming up from Virginia Hot Springs to go to the races. So there will be plenty of "flat Pennsylvania" conversation on Friday and Saturday in Balto. Md. I'm foolish to stick that "ot" in, when there isn't a sign of an "o" on the end of the name? It's just like Missouri—Mo., and it has no "t" in the end anywhere. You might just as well say, "Yes, I live in Philo. Pa."

Did you know that it is the ambition of the Girl Scouts of Philadelphia to own a camp of their own? It is, and the committee is endeavoring to raise funds. The latest enterprise is a rummage sale that it has planned to give on May 1, 2 and 3 at 724 Chestnut street. The site for the camp that is under consideration is situated under the marine encampment at Paoli, and would cost the organization about $700. The fund has already been started, and it is to enlarge it that the committee, under the chairmanship of Owen Martin, has planned this sale.

A wonderfully attractive stock of rummage is now on hand and will be sold by the various members of the committee, including Harriet Deaver, Bessie Fox, Cecily Barnes, Miss Katherine Hutchison, Miss Emily Colon, Miss Gertrude Brunswick and Mrs. Drew Baer.

There are now more than 3500 Girl Scouts, and the summer camp will be able to accommodate 1000. It is a fine opportunity for all to have a summer recreation in camp.

I HEAR that there's to be quite a wonderful affair at the Presbyterian Orphanage next week, on May 8 to be exact. It will be an all-day fete, and there will be a market, and ice cream, and luncheon, and dinner, and tea and all kinds of things like that. Mrs. Richard Norris, who is president of the orphanage, is managing the whole thing, and Mrs. Norman MacLeod has charge of the decorations. The children of the orphanage will give some "exercises"—I don't know whether that means drills or "speaking pieces"—and such—but I've been told that those children are the cutest things you ever saw, and they love to perform for visitors, so I imagine it will be run to watch whatever it is. Mr. John B. McIlhenny is going to give a talk, too.

THERE were six of them last Sunday afternoon and they could not make up their minds what to do. They had to have a party of some kind, and what could they do with only one car in their midst, and that a Ford. Not that a Ford isn't a perfectly good car, but this time they had to get out of and push to start it. He then you had to leap on to the running board and get in any old way after she'd started. Well, the said six girls just naturally had to go somewhere, so they started to ride out toward Willow Grove, and before they were through they'd pushed that car all the way to Willow Grove, with one exception, and that was when they struck a hill near Jenkintown, and they got the old car going and it raced down hill like something possessed. And if you'll believe me, on Monday morning the girl who owned the car was summoned to court for speeding through Jenkintown.

BRICKS AND BOUQUETS

Mr. Pennell Says He Had Little to Do With Decorations on South Broad St.
To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:
Sir—In justice to the other members of the decoration committee of the advisory council of artists, I would be glad if you would allow me to say that I had no more to do with the scheme of decoration on South Broad street than the other members of the committee. I was never even seen there, and I was never even seen there. I was never even seen there. I was never even seen there.

The President's Vision
To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:
Sir—In thanking you for your splendid support of President Wilson in his efforts to put the world on a real peace basis, I would like to enlarge upon a paragraph of your editorial of today, April 25.

Go to New York to Park avenue and Philadelphia, and see a great decoration party carried out, or to Madison Square and look at the imposing arch crowned with Paul Bartlett's Victory, which Philadelphia could have had instead of the affair we have, and as for the flags, New York was at the last hour a marvelous maze of moving color. Our streets look as though we had hung the wash out. And who paid for all this in New York? The Fifth Avenue Business Men's Association, the city and the Liberty Loan, but in New York they do things—here we talk things and do nothing.

Let the Philadelphians who care for their city do this—the business men, the bankers and the people who are forever talking art. The Art Jury, I am sure, would favor the project, and if it did not, well, let it confine itself to cleaning pictures and closing galleries until it is wiped away, and if Philadelphians do not carry out the committee's scheme of making a memorial which will benefit Philadelphia, why let them, as they have been doing for years, sleep on in their smugness and give up talking art and proving the city to be artless.

Real Estate Transaction Explained
To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:
Sir—I desire to call your attention to the fact that your evening edition of April 28, 1919, contains an incorrect statement concerning the proceedings in the case of William Bryant vs. Michael J. Roach, and wish you would be kind enough to correct it. The lease in this case was made by "M. A. Franey, agent," to Michael J. Roach. In making the lease, Franey acted as agent for William Bryant, who was at that time and still is the owner of the premises. The judgment was confessed under the terms of the lease to "M. A. Franey, agent," to be of William Bryant, that is, for the benefit

FINE PROGRAM AT THE FRENCH CONCERT

Mme. Samaroff and Jacques Thibaud the Soloists with the Philadelphia Orchestra

The Philadelphia Orchestra and two world-famous soloists, Mme. Olga Samaroff and Jacques Thibaud, attracted a house which filled the Academy of Music almost to the doors last evening to hear the benefit concert for the women of France under the auspices of the French war relief committee of the Emergency Aid.
As befitting the occasion, the program was made up largely of works by French composers. There was probably the most popular and certainly one of the best orchestral suites ever written by a musician of French birth, the masterpiece of the truly French modern school and the finest violin concerto composed by a French writer.
The program began with the Suite F. Allegretto of Bizet, a lovely work of small proportions but of great charm, known at the concert to be admirably interpreted in character to a miscellaneous program. Apparently for the sake of the late comers Mr. Stokowski played the composition in two parts, the opening allegro and the minuet, with its allegro, as one number and the beautiful adagio and the Enlèvement as the second. The adagio, an exquisite movement for strings alone without basses, was the gem of the suite, which, however, is beautiful from beginning to end, thoroughly consistent in composition and both finely interpreted and played.
This was followed by the Last piano concerto in E flat, commonly known as the "Traveller" concerto, from the prominent part which that instrument of percussion plays in some of the movements. The concerto was played with fine taste, beautiful tone and excellent technique by Mme. Samaroff.
It is pre-eminently a brilliant concert position for a soloist of this class. Samaroff invested it with a sentimental feeling in which the larger lost sight of the technical requirements. She was recalled many times at the close of the concerto.
At the beginning of the second part Mme. Samaroff, the soloist at the last pair of violins, played a typical French concerto, the French concerto, a sense of dramatic interpretation that was not apparent as indeed it would not have been in her pure lyric song of last week. Her forte is evidently dramatic song, and she sang with an intensity and beauty of tone that far surpassed her work at her last appearance, and she was heartily applauded, but, being in costume, did not respond, thereby revealing a stage judgment and taste as fine as her dramatic presentation of the great French national hymn.
The orchestra then played the prelude, "The Afternoon of a Faun" of Debussy, doubtless the orchestral masterpiece of the modern French school. This is one of the works in which Mr. Stokowski is at his best, and the performance of last evening both in reading and in the playing of the orchestra left no impression to be desired. As the Stokowski had Mr. Managrat as the first flute, rise and acknowledge the applause.
The second concerto of the program was the third-violin concerto of Saint-Saens, played by Mr. Thibaud. The soloist maintained, if he did not actually advance, the impression he created here by his previous performances. The concerto is one of the comparatively few French compositions of this type that follows closely the classic model and is full of fine themes, strongly contrasted, and with admirably adapted to the possibilities and limitations of the solo instrument.

Mr. Thibaud played with good tone, though not large, excellent taste and a technique that was ample for the requirements of the concerto. There were a few measures here and there where the accompaniment was not in exact accord with the tempo of the soloist, but these were speedily corrected and the result of this unjustly neglected concerto was admirable throughout. The concerto closed with the familiar "Marche Slave" of Tchaikovsky.
