

Congress Ignored Pleas, Says Sims

Continued from Page One the merchant ships across without submarine loss, just as we conveyed the troops.

"The idea was tried as a last desperate expedient. There had been doubt as to whether the merchant marine could handle a big fleet successfully.

"The idea worked splendidly. Had Congress listened to the advice of naval officers during the last ten years, there would have been sufficient destroyers to have conveyed the merchant ships as well as the troops.

"High Tribute to Red Cross Admiral Sims paid a high compliment to the efficiency of the Red Cross factory and to the support the folks back home had given our troops in every stage of the war.

"The men in the ships and the trenches watched every Liberty Loan eagerly. When a loan was subscribed they took it as a command to 'go to it.' They felt the home folks were backing them up.

"The German sea power would have been overthrown even had the American navy not entered the war," said the admiral.

"Silent on Own Achievements Admiral Sims looked wonderfully alert and well after his long service abroad, and the strain of having to meet problems more difficult than those which confronted any other sea commander.

"He did not explain that he went over to take command of a navy which was in the process of formation and development to vastly greater proportions than ever had dreamed of before.

"The American navy credit for two important achievements. It is laying of the great mine barrage and the carrying out of the convoy idea.

"Can't we fairly claim credit for the convoy idea?" he was asked.

"No," answered the admiral. "It wasn't by any means America's exclusive idea. As a matter of fact, it had been thought of and suggested before America entered the war at all.

"Laying the mine barrage was another job largely done by the ships of the United States. This idea had been thought of before, but Britain was busy elsewhere to put it into execution.

"Federal and police officials are expected to make a round-up of 'reds' here today.

"Twenty-five infernal machines are known to have been dispatched, one exploding and the others being turned over to the authorities.

"It was reported here today that cable messages had been sent to members of the peace delegation in Paris warning them against opening packages.

"Officials, trying to discover the makers and senders of the bombs, hazarded two guesses today, one that the infernal machines were of German origin, the other that a gang of anarchists, possibly Russians, had manufactured them.

"The commission on credentials held a meeting at the Petit Trianon at 3 o'clock on Thursday, May 1, 1919, with M. Cambon presiding.

"The German commission requested to send delegates to this meeting to submit, for the inspection of the credentials commission, the credentials of the German plenipotentiaries.

"M. Cambon, after a short preliminary statement, requested the German delegates to submit the credentials of their plenipotentiaries to the commission and also offered the German delegation the credentials of the allied and associated governments for examination by the German delegation.

"M. Cambon then proposed that the meeting should be adjourned in order that both the German delegation and the commission on credentials might have an opportunity of studying and verifying the credentials which had been submitted to them."

Asiatic Turkey Needs American Mandatory

Continued from Page One confine the Turks to the central and western part of Asia Minor. Doctor Jastrow declared impracticable proposals to attach parts of Asia Minor to Greece. The only way to keep the Turks and Armenians from each other's throats, he said, would be to appoint one of the great powers to supervise Asia Minor.

"America Cannot Withdraw Now In conclusion Dr. Jastrow said: 'The United States cannot if it would withdraw from participation in the great problems now confronting the world, if for no other reason than because of the international conflict we will be inevitably drawn in, as we were in this one. New conditions call for new measures, and difficult as it may be for us to adjust our mental processes to the new world which is rising before our eyes out of the smoke and flames, circumstances, which are always stronger than philosophical reflections, force us to play an unaccustomed role. Of various solutions proposed for the Turkish question there is none that promises a greater guarantee for the development of the resources in Asia Minor, and for promoting the education of the masses to fit them at some future time for complete self-government, than for this country to seriously consider taking over the mandatory power, in case, as seems probable, this demand will be made upon us. It will be a great responsibility, but a still greater opportunity for service in the cause of progress and enlightenment, to which this country ever since its birth has been committed.'
