

HOTEL MEN REFUSE PEACE TO STRIKERS

Kitchen Help Who Went Out for Day Can Stay Out, Say Managers

GUESTS BREAK FAST TODAY

No jobs for May Day strikers. That is the ultimatum of the hotel managers in this city as the result of yesterday's walkout of cooks, waiters and kitchen helpers about 1000 of whom placed the hotel guests on short rations by their actions.

The strikers' pleas will be filed today, according to David B. Provan, secretary of the Hotel Managers' Association, and the men refused their old jobs. Mr. Provan said that the fight to the finish was on and that hoteliers had arrived at their decision and continued their ultimatum to the employees on the day after yesterday.

The striking men are all members of the International Hotel Workers' Federation. They met yesterday at the union headquarters at 21 North Fifteenth street. The men were told that there were 2000 men out with them, but this was strenuously denied by the hoteliers.

W. Kujawski, secretary-treasurer of the union, said today that the strikers had been called on to do all the work of the hotel since the strike. He declared that if any of the union men were refused their jobs a general strike of all the union members would be called.

The waiters in the various hotels for the most part stuck to their jobs. Many of them are members of the Waiters and Cooks' Alliance, who demonstrated their union as "the Americans." J. Williams, business manager of this town, declared that his organization would not join the strikers in any attempt to have the May Day strikers reinstated.

"We are American citizens," he declared, "and we will not strike." He declared that his organization would not join the strikers in any attempt to have the May Day strikers reinstated.

GIMBEL FIRM HERE PROBES BOMB PLOT

Member Seeks to Learn How Reds Obtained Labels With Store's Name

CLUE FOUND IN ODD TYPE

Rigid inquiry was started here today by members of the firm of Gimbel Brothers to learn if there was any possible connection between the bomb outrage and the Philadelphia establishment of the business.

Daniel Gimbel, of the firm, is investigating the matter. He said: "I am sure that the printer of this material will be caught. I do not believe the plot was hatched here or that any of our material was used, but I am not content to rest on personal convictions in such a matter and have started a thorough investigation."

"I have had thought to my desk every day of how I could in our establishment here, and there is nothing even remotely resembling the green box used by the perpetrators of the outrage. I have likewise ordered inquiry made of all printing shops in our establishment here because the printing on the wrapper of the packages is very similar to that used in our printing."

In the report brought to the Gimbel store was a statement that no wrapping paper ever used by the store had the word "sample" on it, and also that none of the wrapping paper was ever marked with the cut of the Alpine mountain climber.

Careful search and inquiry through out the Gimbel store failed to show any counter which had a box marked with the green mountain climber, the only boxes used in the Philadelphia store are either white or gray. There are other boxes on the counters, holding goods, just as they have been shipped from the manufacturers, but none resembles the green boxes found in the store.

After his preliminary investigation Daniel Gimbel said: "The word sample proves that this is a forgery job and shows the figure of the man in the wrapping pattern. It is quite true that the type used for our firm name is similar to that used, but that is a simple matter for any printer. This word 'sample,' however, should provide a splendid clue to the authorities, as it is of an unusual character, and I doubt whether more than two or three firms in this country have made this type. I am now resorting to other means to identify the printer, and if successful, we will have the man who made the boxes in our store, have taken some of them and used them. I am having that phase of the matter looked into in the hope that some clue may be gained."

ASHER C. HINDS DEAD
Former Congressman and Famous Parliamentary Expert
Portland, Me., May 2 (By A. P.)—The death in Washington of former Congressman Asher C. Hinds, compiler of "Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representatives" and for a number of years clerk at the speaker's table in Congress, was announced here today.

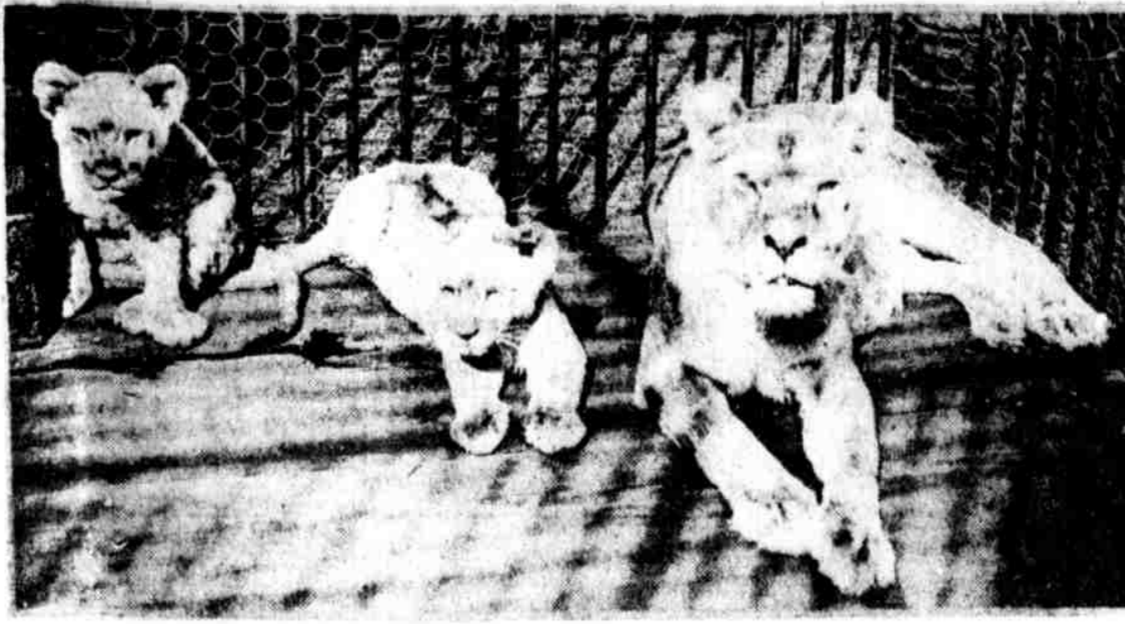

Alexander Crosby Hinds, who for a period had been known as the "boss of Congress," before he became a member of that body, graduated into politics from the newspaper business, having filled editorial posts on Portland journals before he was chosen as speaker's clerk in the House of Representatives, in 1889, when he was twenty six years old. Six years later he was made clerk at the speaker's table (parliamentary clerk), and in both these positions he displayed a knowledge of parliamentary tactics, nothing short of uncanny. He was the right hand of Speaker "Tom" Reed in the famous rulings that gave that formidable Maine leader his title of "Czar," and there was no situation in which his chief of his party ever became involved in the hot politics that marked the Republican ascendancy in the House, which Hinds's skill was not sufficient to meet and turn to advantage.

In 1910 he was elected to the sixty-second Congress and was re-elected in 1912 and 1914.

In the days when Cannon wielded the Speaker's gavel, Asher Hinds was the parliamentary lieutenant of the House. "Uncle Tom" wouldn't think of taking up for consideration a bill on which there was a possibility of involved debate, unless Mr. Hinds was standing beside his desk, ready and willing to pilot the legislative craft to a safe harbor of precedents. Not only was he gifted with a knowledge of the rules, precedents and usages of the deliberative bodies of this country, but he had a familiarity with those of the leading foreign nations.

A strict partisan, Mr. Hinds was nevertheless a fair fighter and was not deceived by his most ardent foes of anything more than a thorough acquaintance with the "tricks of trade." He was born at Benton, Me., February 8, 1863, and has lived in Maine all his life.

"First one out holds the trench." This shout of enthusiastic Camden youngsters to several companions as they hurried into a lot in the rear of the Bonsall School, Mt. Ephraim avenue and Madison streets, on the previous evening, led to the discovery of a body in the trench.

The trench was occupied. A man in the uniform of the United States army lay in the trench, a revolver beside him. Blood covered the ground near his head.

The body was found by a group of children playing in the rear of the school. The body was found by a group of children playing in the rear of the school.

Later she joined the First special Division for the Argonne fighting and was on the Meuse when the armistice was signed.

CROWDS SEE KEEPER KILLED BY LIONESS

Woodbury Terrorized When Circus Beast Escapes After Mangling Negro

SHOT BY ATTENDANT

Woodbury residents today are still discussing the lion scare that swept over that New Jersey town yesterday when a circus lioness killed a keeper, escaped from her cage and ran loose. It was killed by a cowboy.

John Henry, a negro, was the victim of the jungle beast's powerful jaws. His neck was crushed by the lioness' teeth and he was killed after he had stooped to milk several of her cubs.

After killing Henry, the animal rushed open the barred door, left unwatched by the keeper, and bounded out into the circus reservation in true Roman arena style.

Men hastily climbed on circus wagons. A few tried to "shimmy" on the center pole of the "big top." Women screamed and dived under seats. A score of schoolboys, who a minute before had been feasting their eyes on a spangled performer, made hasty exits under the tent sides.

George Henderson, one of the schoolboys, ran directly in the animal's path. The boy stood before the beast for a few seconds as it prepared to leap. As the lioness sprang a circus man fired a shotgun, peppering her hide with the small pellets. The lioness turned aside from the boy and another attendant swung a heavy stake down on her head.

Stunned by the blow, the lioness stopped, while Gus Miller, a cowboy, pumped a stream of bullets into her body until life was extinct.
