And So They Were Married

By HAZEL DEYO BATCHELOR Copyright, 1919, by Public Ledger Co.

START THIS STORY TODAY IT CONTINUED during the evening. plenty of people turned to look at the slender, golden-haired woman. Natalie had apparently made friends, too, because she bowed to several nice-looking men and women. Her feelings seemed very far buried beneath the surface seemed emotionless, and Jack, who had thought he would be relieved, was piqued instead.

They strolled on the boardwalk after dinner and Jack found himself not being bored. A good-looking young fellow came up to them after they had been walking a while and Natalic introduced him to Jack. Jack recognized the name as quite a famous one. He belonged to a well-known Philadelphia family with loads of money. Jack walked on one side of Natalic and Arthur Enright on the other, and Jack found himself not included in the conversation to any extent. Natalie was still another person with this young fellow. There something of the boyishness that she had shown to him when he had first interested in her, long before he had thought of marrying. He liked it, it was charming. Certainly there nothing firtatious in her manner. nothing that he could possibly object to, and yet she held the interest of this man without any trouble They talked and laughed and Jack smoked and thought. He wished vaguely that Natalie had been like he imagined she would be, washed out and pale and without much initiative so he could feel contemptuous toward her, and sorry for himself. He wanted to feel this way, it seemed to bring Path much pearer and Ruth was the woman he wanted, and couldn't have.

Natalie went upstairs when they got back to the hotel and Jack stayed down to smoke a cigarette. Arthur Enright stayed with him and to Jack's amusement talked considerably about Natalie When Jack finally did go upstairs and into his room he was troubled. "Who's your kid friend?" he asked you aleepy, guess I'll turn in."

"I'm off," he said in a voice calculated to sound matter of fact, "good-night." He did not offer to kiss her and she made no move toward him. The door between the two rooms closed and Natalie stood perfectly still for a moment in the center of the room. Then with a quick movement she snapped off the electric light and slipped out of her negligee. In a moment she was in bed, with her face buried in the pillows. Great racking sobs shook her frail little body, but not a sound was heard. On the other side of the door Jack, in an effort to get off his collar had torn it almost half off the band. He wondered why he was so angry.
