LA SOLUZIONE DEL PROBLEMA ITALIANO

Il Concilio dei Quattro Avrebbe Raggiunto un Accordi Riguardo la Costa Adriatica

Published and Distributed Under PERMIT NO. 341
Authorized by the act of October 6, 1917, on file at the Postoffice of Philadelphia, Pa.
By order of the President
A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Parigi, 29 maggio.—La questione di Fiume ed i confini territoriali meridionali dell'Austria sono stati sistemati dal Concilio degli Alleati, secondo autorevoli informazioni di ieri sera.

Un accordo sarebbe stato raggiunto sulla questione generale dell'Adriatico, ad eccezione di quanto riguarda l'aggiustamento economico. Tutte queste questioni territoriali saranno presentate venerdi' agli austriaci nei termini proposti. Quanto riguarda le riparazioni sara' considerato piu' tardi.

Nelle sfere italiane e' stato dichiarato che l'accordo relativo alla questione di Fiume non e' ancora definito.

Una sessione plenaria della Conferenza della Pace sara' tenuta nel pomeriggio di oggi al Ministero degli Affari Esteri. I termini dei trattato con l'Austria dovranno essere comunicati ai rappresentanti delle nazioni che ruppero le relazioni con essa.

Gli Stati formatesi sul vecchio Impero Austriaco dovranno pagare in parte le indennita' dovute dall'Austria, non come nemici dell'Intesa, ma in compenso della loro liberazione, ed anche redimere proporzionatamente la carta monetata posta in circolazione dall'Austria nei suoi stati, ammontante a circa quaranta biglioni di corone ($8,000,000,000). Il pagamento delle indennita' dovute dall'Austria ammontano a circa 2500 milioni di corone. Una eguale somma verrebbe ripartita proporzionatamente tra l'Ungheria, la Czeco-Slovacchia, la Rumenia, la Polonia e l'Italia.

Parigi, 29 maggio.—E' stato dichiarato nelle alte sfere, questa mattina, che un aggiustamento sulla questione Adriatica e' ora certo, come risultato dei negoziati di ieri e della sera precedente. Sotto detto aggiustamento la citta' di Fiume sarebbe dichiarata indipendente.

Gli Italiani avrebbero alcune isole della Dalmazia, ma si crede che non avranno Zara e Sebenico.

(Il telegramma qui' sopra riportato accenna ad una soluzione che sembra impossibile, se si considerano le altre notizie finora giunte riguardo la soluzione della questione Adriatica e l'atteggiamento fermo della delegazione italiana alla Conferenza della Pace. N. d. R.)

City Leaders Tell of "Ideal" for Mayor

qualifications which, in his judgment, the Mayor should possess:

"The Mayor of Philadelphia should have the same qualifications as the successful head of a large corporation or other important business enterprise, because administering the affairs of a great city is simply a business undertaking. He should work with no other thought than furthering the progress and development of Philadelphia to the greatest extent in his power."

John S. Bioren, banker and president of the Merchants' Union Trust Company, thus voices his views: "It would seem to me that the best interests of Philadelphia require that a man of affairs—a business man—be selected at this time for the mayoralty. It is essential that he be affiliated with the dominant political party, but I have no one especially in mind."

Charles S. Calwell, president of the Corn Exchange National Bank, referred to a referendum vote now being taken by the Chamber of Commerce.

"The qualifications sought by the chamber in its referendum," said Mr. Calwell, "appear to me to be idealistic. They call for a man 'one hundred per cent pure.' Of course, the terms as laid down by the chamber were intended to be ideal, but, personally, I will be content, if we cannot get a '100 per cent man' to take one of 99 per cent.

Honesty Chief Requirement

"Ability and honesty are the chief requirements in my opinion. A business man, if he has ability, will easily acquire the political and legislative knowledge needed."

Mrs. Rudolph Blankenburg, widow of Philadelphia's only reform Mayor, says women's organizations are ready to play an active part in the approaching municipal contest.

"I recently attended the convention of the League for Good Citizenship," said Mrs. Blankenburg, and found that body fully organized and holding itself in readiness to take a hand in the campaign provided there appeared to be any chance of its work amounting to success.

"For my own part, I am not inclined to expect everything in the matter of a candidate at this time. Governor Sproul at the charter dinner said he stood ready to co-operate in every move for our civic betterment and government, but cautioned us not to expect everything. As he put it, we will 'have to let some mice get through in order to get the elephants.' That is the way I feel at this time.

"For the candidate I would suggest a business man, because we want a business administration. I do not think we ought to have a clergyman or a lawyer rather a man of broad intelligence and experience from participation in public affairs.

Must Have Political Backing

"The new Mayor must have the political parties back of him. Mr. Blankenburg did not have that, consequently he was unable to do many things which he had in mind."

Dr. Russell H. Conwell, president of Temple University and pastor of Grace Baptist Temple, suggests: "A suitable man, so far above petty party partisanship that he will not be led away from his duty to the people. Our present city charter was passed under a mayor who was the virtual choice of both political parties of his time. I do not favor an independent party, but the nomination of a man on the ticket of both parties as our judges are.

"In the war crisis the government got man, inspired by patriotic motives to do its work, at a salary of $1 a year, whom it could not otherwise have engaged at any price. It seems to me the needs of the city could induce such a citizen to stand as a candidate and that he would be the best sort of a candidate."

Mayor Sulzberger, retired jurist, scholar and philanthropist, is outspoken in his advocacy of a candidate. He says:

"I believe our next Mayor should be a man of the type of William Potter. I do not nominate Mr. Potter, although I might well do so, for I consider he possesses the attributes that I hold our next Mayor should have.

"He is a business man, a manufacturer. He is a diplomat, having represented our government as minister to Italy and in other important and confidential capacities. He is interested in charities and in educational affairs. He is president of one of our leading medical colleges.

"He is free of political entanglements."

Emil P. Albrecht, president of the Bourse, says:

"In my judgment the next Mayor should be a man of fairly long residence in the city of recognized business and financial ability, one used to handling large and complex problems and one who understands the needs and limitations of all classes of people. He should be, if possible, a man independent of the emolument attaching to the office and able and willing to devote his entire time to its duties for the love of his city, for the welfare of its inhabitants and the honor which would come to him as the city's head. He would need to know 'politics' as they are generally spoken of, but should not be 'factional' in affiliations.

Should Be Man Like Sproul

"He should be broad and open (not empty) minded, should be able to recognize the right things to do and be firm enough to stand out for them without being dictatorial. He should possess the faculty of molding men to his ways by convincing them of the soundness and correctness of his views. He should be positive, not weak or vacillating, and at the same time be able to appreciate, weigh and determine between the two or more sides to every question. He should be able to make friends of those with whom he may disagree, and should be possessed in the highest degree of uncommon good sense. As a type, to mention one who is not and cannot be a candidate, he should be a man blessed with qualifications such as those I believe to be possessed by our present Governor."

Frederick P. Gruenberg, director of the Bureau of Municipal Research thus outlines his standards for the test of the next Mayor:

"In the first place, the candidate must be a person of intelligence and character. This sounds trite, but no Philadelphian need be reminded that these qualities have not been present in all of our mayors. In addition to native intelligence the candidate for mayor should possess sufficient education to be able to fill his office not only with dignity but with understanding.

"Each year the problems of our chief executive become more and more difficult of solution and we must face the fact frankly that no man can be an effective mayor unless he understands the economic and social problems that, after all, underlie the problems of government.

Should Be Business Trained.

"Every candidate for Mayor should, moreover, have experience and training in administration. Whether this experience was obtained in the business world or in the successful conduct of some important governmental office or offices does not matter.

"Last but not least, the test of each candidate for Philadelphia mayoralty must be moral. Being a good husband and father and a regular church attendant is not enough. The acid test of fitness applied to each candidate for the Mayoralty henceforth must be: first and absolutely, clear record; second, an unselfish ideal of public service; third, freedom from any business connection that profits through municipal work; fourth, independence of action regardless of political factions, parties or groups."

Spencer K. Mulford, of England, Walton & Co., heartily indorsed the Chamber of Commerce in its measure of the man for the mayoralty. He adds:

"I think the most fitting candidate would be a retired business man removed from financial needs or other things which might hamper his proper administration. He should have also experience with public affairs.

"A man of the type of Alba B. Johnson embodies my idea of what our next mayor should be. I think we have several men here of the type I have named who would serve if the nomination came to them in a clean way; handed to them on a silver plate instead of in a back room.

Want Man Better Than Smith

"We want a man better fitted than we have now. What we want now and always want is a man as mayor, such as is outlined by the Chamber of Commerce and not the candidate of political ringsters."

Joseph M. Richie, representative here of the American Federation of Labor, says: "I think we ought to have a Mayor who would be progressive, who would do all within the powers of his office to give all Philadelphians a square deal, and who would fill the office as the law directs him to do."

Charles J. Cohen, of Charles J. Cohen Company: "I believe we can get such a man as the Chamber of Commerce suggests. If we can only persuade them, the politicians will do what we want them to do. They will fall in line and give us the right man.

"I am glad this important matter is being taken up and brought to public attention. It should help us to get what we want."

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

By DADDY

'THE QUEST OF JOYOUSNESS'

(Peggy and Billy pursue Joyousness up a mountain. Frowning Phil and Wantit Myway join in the chase.)

An Invitation to Dinner

JOYOUSNESS balanced herself on the tip of a jutting rock and called back an invitation to her pursuers.

"Are you hungry? Come to my dinner party. It will be ready at 6 o'clock."

Then Joyousness took the shortest way down the mountain, flitting from crag to crag and skipping boldly across cliffs and sharp slopes. As she was light as air this was not particularly dangerous for her, but Peggy and Billy shuddered when they gazed down the dizzy heights and thought what would happen if a human tried the same path.

"Dinner! I hope she has fried chicken and pineapple ice," exclaimed Frowning Phil, greedily.

"Toot! Toot!" sounded the locomotive whistle, and Peggy, Billy, Hopeful Smiles and Cheer Up promptly jumped aboard the train.

"Are you going back that same long, dull way?" asked Phil.

"Of course. It's the only safe way," answered Hopeful Smiles. "There are wild beasts and many dangers on the short path."

"Aw, shoot! I want to go straight down. We'll be late for dinner if we go crawling along on that awful train."

"Zowie! There you go again!" wailed Wantit Myway, turning upside down. Frowning Phil, as usual, turned over with him.

"Toot! Toot!" sounded the whistle a second time, and the toy train began to glide swiftly down the steep grades.

Peggy was sorry to have Frowning Phil left behind, but it really was his own fault. If instead of always kicking and scowling he would learn to make the best of things, even if they weren't just as he had planned, he would have as good a time as she and Billy.

And they were having a good time—such a good time that they shrieked with glee. The train ran faster and faster, plunging down steep inclines, scooting up steep grades and swerving violently around abrupt curves. It was like riding on a huge roller coaster, except that they went on and on and on for miles and miles.

Looking back they saw Frowning Phil and Wantit Myway starting along the steep, short path. Phil evidently didn't intend to miss the dinner party. Perhaps he would get there ahead of them and eat everything up.

"Well, even if he does we are having a jolly ride," cried Peggy.

"And I guess Joyousness will save a few crumbs for us," added Hopeful Smiles.

Faster and faster they went until Peggy wondered how they were going to stop. No ordinary brakes could hold the train at that speed. But she didn't need to work, for as they plunged into the valley, they met a stiff wind, which blew and blew so hard that it slowed up their speed and finally brought them to a stop right at the entrance of a beautiful house. Joyousness stood at the door.

"Welcome! You are just in time," she cried. "But where are Frowning Phil and Wantit Myway?"

"They took a short cut down the mountain. Aren't they here?" answered Peggy.

"No," said Joyousness, turning her eyes up the mountain. "There they are on the heights and they seem to be in trouble."

Looking up the steep slopes Peggy and Billy saw Frowning Phil and Wantit Myway far above. They were sliding down the face of a cliff and trying desperately to stop themselves before they reached a ledge at the bottom. And no wonder they wanted to stop, for on the ledge waiting for them were two hungry-looking mountain lions.

(Tomorrow will be told how Frowning Phil bumps the bumps and misses his dinner.)

BARBER SHOOTS BANDIT

One Man in Hospital; Police Hold Another

Switching on the lights at his barber shop at Ambler late in the evening, Louis Kirtley was confronted by two masked men who told him to throw up his hands. Not waiting for him to respond, one of them hit him on the head with a blackjack. Kirtley shot one of them through the stomach. Both his assailants ran.

A posse later found a man, giving his name as William Miller, of Philadelphia, lying in a meadow with a bullet wound in his stomach. He is held at Chestnut Hill Hospital. Chief of Police Foord arrested a man giving his name as Paul Booker, also of Philadelphia, as Kirtley's other assailant.

ELEVATED STATION AWARDS

Contracts Let for Allegheny Avenue and Somerset Street Stations

Director Twining this afternoon awarded to Joseph Connor the contract for erecting an elevated station at Kensington avenue and Somerset street, at contract price of $52,340, and to the Standard Construction Company the station at Allegheny avenue, the price for which is $57,575.

Bids for these contracts were readvertised after the art jury had amended some of the original plans. The result was that the estimates submitted by the eight bidders today were considerably lower than the original proposals. The lessened cost was attained by substituting concrete for steel in some of the work.

SMALL MORNING FIRE

Four Negroes Driven to Street in Grocery Store Blaze

Four negroes were driven to the street early today when fire broke out at 608 South Twelfth street. The grocery store of Barnett Jacobson is located on the first floor of the South Twelfth street address, and the upper floors are occupied by several families.

The fire is thought to have started in a pile of brooms in a grocery store and quickly spread to other stock. A passerby saw smoke coming from the building and turned in an alarm. The blaze was quickly extinguished and the damage is estimated at several hundred dollars.
