ment. Remember when you are buying an electric iron, it is qualities that make for reliability that are more important than anything else.

Third Division of Regular Army

To the Editor of the Woman's Page; Dear Madam-I am writing to obtain some desired information which I had a desire to have a long time ago, and desire to have a long time ago, and feel sure you can give it to me.

Could you tell me from what state the men of the Third Division come; like our Twenty-eighth and Seventy-ninth Devisions, and what are the men of the Third called, like the Twenty-in-the localled, the Iron Division? eighth is called the Iron Division?

Where could I purchase the story of the Third Division? You may won-der why I desire to know so much about the Division. I have a brother who enlisted in the regular army and was put into the Third. He was wounded last October, 1918, and not another word of him has been heard; and in spite of all our efforts to obtain information of him we have failed. And it seems of him we have failed. And it seems strange he does not write. So you see, it's most likely he has given up his life for his beloved country.

When you hear of such and such Division and what they have done you fail to hear about the Third, which was among the first to arrive overseas and lost more heavily than the Twenty-eighth Division, if I must say; and why give so much credit to one Division—give them all the same. Being among give them all the same. Being among the first to go overseas they are still there with the army of occupation.

Please tell me all you can about the Third and if any reader can tell me more about the Third, I will certainly appreciate it. READER.

The Third Division is a regular army division recruited from all over the country. It has a splendid record of service, among the engagements being the fighting on the Marne near Chateau Thierry from July 14 until July 31,

I do not think any permanent record of the Third Division has been compiled so far, but there is sure to be. To find out about it write to the division head-
