WEATHER Fair

There Is a Notable Improvement in the Quality of the Merchandise

Our Great Country Seems to Be Just Emerging From Its Swaddling Clothes to Larger Life

Its first industries for many, years were to obtain food, build shelters for the families, spin and weave the wool of the flocks for clothing.

Next came the building of schools, churches and colleges and the promotion of education.

An era of road-making and railroading followed, linking together the intercourse of families and neighborhoods.

Fifty-eight years ago our homeland was thrown into confusion and collision under the pressure of a settlement of a long-debated question that brought on the Brothers' War.

The unfolding of hidden powers and strength of the Republic and the instincts of the human soul, and the awakened intelligence of our own minds, under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln, without interference of other nations, soon ended the regretful war and gave to America the past halfcentury of joy and peace.

Since then the United States has been compelled to cross the seas to protect itself and begin the foundations for the world-wide

Reign of the Common People

Today the work is well on its way.

All these June days the great universities and colleges of our cities and states are graduating great bodies of men, educated in engineering and the sciences and for places which they are to take in the business affairs of the day.

Let us take courage and plan great things, attempt great things and expect greater things.

A few of the nicer things that we used to have before the war are finding their way to us.

We have an amplitude of the most desirable merchandise to show you-chiefly French, English, American and Japanese dinner sets; also a very fine collection of cut glass, light cuttings and other inexpensive glassware.

All of these goods are of the kind we always sell-that is, the standard kind.

They are being offered in this Sale at considerable reductions from the regular. standard prices. We don't want to talk about the large quantities that we are selling, except to say that it is the best possible sign of the desirableness of the goods. The extraordinary buying of dinner sets and glassware for bridal gifts is also worth noting.

French china prices are on the advance. The demand for these goods all over the world is great and the output limited.

Everything points to the wisdom of buying now, and of buying where you can be sure of getting the standard grades.
