

No Bride Ever Had Such A Honeymoon

As did the young wife of Buffalo Bill when, with him, she headed for the unknown West.

Here was a man, as she says, who could ride anything made of horseflesh;

Who could kill 40 buffaloes in an hour;

Who could tear a hole in a silver dollar flipped in the air and then hit it again before it touched the ground;

In the midst of danger he was at home;

There had never been a white man or Indian who could best him in a fight;

With that man I went into the trackless West as a bride!

A Night On the Plains

I SHALL never forget it. It was on the plains at Three Wells. It was only a week before when the Indians swooped down upon a party here, killed everybody, burned the wagons and stole the horses. Now I was to spend the night on this very spot. With dry throat, fevered lips, and parched eyes, I watched hour after hour all that night, my raw nerves leaping at every sound.

A Night In a Frontier Saloon

I was alone in the back room of a frontier saloon. My husband had gone to the Fort. I crept to the rickety partition that sheltered me from the bar, locked the door and crept into bed. In the saloon, men were quarreling and drinking. Afraid? I had to grit my teeth to summon courage. The quarreling grew louder in the saloon, and suddenly—I leaped straight in the air.

My Baptism of Fire

ONE NIGHT I slept in a tent and was aroused by shouting and quarreling. Before I realized it, my tent was torn down, I was in the center of a fight. Men were all about me tearing at one another, and my baby and I were in danger of being trampled to death. I picked my baby up in one hand, a revolver in the other. A man struck at me, knocking the revolver from my hand!
