"Would you mind telling me how you and Scott can take care of him?" Uncle David's remark was dry.

"We'll manage," Ruth said passionately. She was ready for open rebellion now.

"What do you think about it, Scott?" asked Uncle David. For a moment the two men looked at each other, the old and the young, the successful and the struggler, the one face shrewd and businesslike, the other keen and eager and still full of dreams.

"I think you're right about taking Bobby where he can have advantages," Scott said slowly. Ruth knew he was right, she knew it was the only thing to say, but for the moment she almost hated Scott for saying it.

"That's sensible," approved Uncle David, "and now as long as Bobby is to be brought up by us, I think it is just as well for your aunt and I to decide what is best for him."

Ruth cried herself to sleep that night, but Bobby came to the funeral. He sat close to Martha, and did not seem to hold her hand all through the service.

Ruth hated it all. She hated her mother's friends coming up to tell her how beautiful her mother looked, and how natural. She hated the air of patronizing authority that Aunt Winifred took, she hated the feeling of having nothing to say about anything, she even felt estranged from Scott.

Then it was all over, and a silent, wide-eyed Bobby wandered about the house for the next few days. Ruth ached for his tomboy roughness, his teasing, the touch of his dirty hands. It broke her heart to see him this way; it broke her heart that she had to see him go out of her life, for it was virtually that. She knew that the times she would see Bobby would be few and far between after he became a part of her uncle's establishment.

The furniture was disposed of summarily. Aunt Winifred said virtuously, "We'd better have it stored for the time being. You won't have room for it in your apartment, Ruth." And Ruth, inwardly writhing, had to acquiesce.

Bobby had become interested in the trip by the time he was ready to leave, and Aunt Winifred bore him off in triumph.

"You and Scott must come and spend your vacation with us whenever you can," she said graciously when she bade them good-by. But Ruth, with her arms tight about Bobby, hardly heard her. Bobby was sobbing hard, and it was with the sound of his crying in her ears and a look of stern disapproval on Aunt Winifred's face that Ruth saw the last of them.

The little apartment looked strange to Ruth when she and Scott at last went home. It seemed as though they had been away for many months, so much had happened. Alice was still there. She was very sweet to Ruth and said very little to her. The first night home long after Scott had fallen asleep Ruth lay awake crying softly. She did not know why she felt so utterly lonely, but she did. It wasn't so much that she grieved for her mother, although she would miss her horribly, but it was everything combined that went to cause change. More than anything in the world, Ruth detested change.

The next morning at breakfast Ruth had recovered to the extent of not being entirely absorbed in her own unhappiness. She could not help noticing that Alice looked very bad and ate almost nothing. Instantly her thoughts leaped to Bert. Could Alice have heard anything more about him? How would that affect her, anyway?

It was a very silent trio that ate breakfast. Scott did not read because the paper hadn't come. Outside the air was raw and smelled of rain, it blew the curtains in and filled the room with a chilly feeling.

The minute Scott had left for the office Ruth turned to Alice inquiringly.

"Something has happened?"

"No, that's just it, nothing has happened," said Alice, turning to Ruth suddenly. "I've been expecting and hoping he would write. I couldn't believe he would just let me go like this. O, Ruth, what shall I do?" And Alice, practical Alice, wrung her hands together like a nervous, hysterical woman.

"Haven't you heard a word?"

"Not a word since I came away."

"Perhaps you'll have a letter this morning."

Alice shook her head. "I've given up hope now, but it's my own fault, Ruth, whatever comes of this."

"Why don't you put your pride in your pocket and write to him? You came away, you know, it's really up to you. Wait a minute, there's the mail now, I'll get it, there may be something for you."

"But there was nothing for Alice in the mail, only a letter for Scott, with the name of the apartment owner up in the corner.

In the next installment, another turn of the wheel of misfortune.

TOMORROW IS KOSSOVO

Independence Day for Serbians—900 Celebrate Here

Serbians in this city will observe tomorrow as Kossovo, the Day of Serbian Independence. Services will be held in the morning and afternoon in the Douine Obodovitch, Third and Bower streets, under the auspices of the Serbian national defense committee of Philadelphia.

Yovan Stanoy, president of the committee, will preside at both meetings, and will deliver the main address of the morning meeting. In the afternoon, Captain Pulich, of the Serbian army, now stationed in Washington, will speak.

This is the first time when the 900 Serbians in this city can unite in celebrating their complete independence from the Turks, who have separated them for hundreds of years.

The significance of the term Kossovo is that at the battle of that name in 1389, the Serbs checked the great advance of the Moslems into Europe, and although defeated and conquered themselves, saved Christian Europe by giving it a chance to organize for defense.

Wanamaker's Down Stairs Store—A Comfortable Shopping Place, Abounding in Good Summer Merchandise at Low Prices

Delightful Dresses of Real Distinction

Perhaps you are looking for a dress that stands out, with an air of individuality, from other dresses. The Gray Room is a most interesting place to spend a half hour or so.

Here you will find charming frocks of organdie in pale pinks and blues, cool greens, fresh white and some with nosogays scattered over them. Here is a dress with rows of satin ribbon trimming the skirt. There is one that is beaded, another is embroidered lightly. All of these dresses are of the sheerest, coolest organdie and their prices range from $12 to $25.

Creamy net dresses, very fine of texture and prettily embroidered, are $39.50.

Or If You Prefer Georgette your choice is still wider, for there are scores of dresses of this graceful material. Most of them are beaded and the colors are a joy—pale pink, coral, turquoise, sky, twilight, orchid, amber and white. Suggestive of Fall are the very new arrivals in dark Georgettes. An interesting model in black or navy blue is elaborately embroidered with crystal beads. $18.50 to $43.50.

Printed Georgette and Hindu Crepes are cool and practical. The Georgette crepes are in navy blue with white figures and are most becomingly made with round necks and gathered sleeves that are bound with soft satin to match the sash. $25.

The Hindu crepes are in black or navy, figured in white, veiled with Georgette crepe. $20.

All-White Voiles are embroidered or trimmed with bands of eyelet embroidery. They start as low as $6 and go to $23.50.

Special

A little lot of novelty dresses, new models developed in pres de soie, a lustrous cotton material. They are in navy blue with white dots and are trimmed with pipings or buttons of white. $12.

Among the Less Expensive Dresses
there seems no end to the variety. Cool voiles in plain colors or pencil stripes are $6. Pin check voiles in green, pink, blue or black with plain white organdie collars and cuffs are $7.50 and so are quaint voiles with chintz printings. Voiles in dark grounds are worth a word of their own. They abound here and you can choose from dozens of patterns with navy blue or black grounds. $8.50, $10, $12 and $13.50.

Among the Finer Skirts
Are Some Truly Charming Things
One can easily picture any one of them on a well-groomed woman at a shore hotel, going in to dinner or dancing in the evening, for these skirts are especially appropriate for semi-formal occasions.

There is a case and a half full of them, each skirt seeming prettier than the last, from which you can choose your own individual model.

Prices Begin at $15

for gleaming Baronette skirts on graceful lines and go up through unusually good-looking skirts of tricolette, white habutai, embroidered chiffon and fine white serge embroidered in color.

The skirts of Georgette in fine tucks and of heavy, rich crepe de chine deserve a word by themselves. When worn with the right blouses they would be acceptable for many occasions. They take up so little space and are so easily packed that they would be ideal for the Fourth of July holidays.

The highest price is $29.50, for which there are some exquisite skirts of Baronette combined with Georgette and finished with crystal buttons.
