Kensington System in Bad Shape—$100,000 Asked for Emergency Work

DELEGATION ASKS RELIEF

Breaks and threatened breaks in old sewers in Kensington yesterday called imperiously for emergency work for which the director of public works wants $100,000.

New sewers may have to be constructed without appropriation in the emergency. In the neighborhood of Fourth and Diamond streets fourteen blocks of dwellings, about 1000 houses and 5000 population, were affected by the collapse of a fifty-three-year-old three-foot brick sewer, part of the Winglocking drainage system.

John Maguire, of 2127 North Fourth street, and a dozen or half a dozen residents appeared at City Hall, seeking relief from Chief Albright, of the Bureau of Surveys, and the Department of Public Works.

"Our cellars are flooded," said the head of the delegation. "There has been frequent trouble from the sewer for a year. We have been repeatedly promised a new sewer. We understand that there is an ordinance in Councils, which has been pending there for a long time, to provide for a new sewer. With sewage water filling our cellars, the whole community is in peril of disease."

Numerous other calls for help were made by residents over the telephone to City Hall. John Allen, of the sewer division, and Chief Dunlap, of the highway bureau, were kept busy explaining the situation to worried citizens.

SHOE MAN ENDS LIFE

Melville Woodbury, in Business Here, Shoots Himself

Melville Woodbury, sixty-one years old, shoe manufacturer in Beverly, Mass., and this city, ended his life with a rifle at his home in Beverly. He had been in poor health a year. He went around town yesterday as usual, chatting with friends, and then returned home.

Mr. Woodbury was born in Beverly. He learned the shoe manufacturing business and formed the Millett-Woodbury company. Later he was engaged in the shoe business in Lynn. He still maintained an interest in business in Philadelphia with his two sons, Ira V. and Byron Woodbury, who live at Nineteenth and Brown streets. They left the city today to arrange for their father's funeral.

He was a director of the Beverly National Bank, and was prominent in fraternal orders. He was a charter member of the Beverly board of trade and belonged to the Union Club. A widow, two sons and two daughters, Mrs. Edward C. Edwards, of Beverly, and Mrs. Karl Hill, of this city, survive him.
