Nancy Wynne Hears of an Accident to Mr. Charles E. Coxe-She Takes a Trip to Paradise Farm. The Bride Buys Furniture

DID you hear about the hard luck of Mr. Charles E. Coxe? You know he and Mrs. Coxe gave a dinner dance not long ago at Malvern Farm for Eckley and his bride. It was a wonderful party, I hear, about three or four hundred people there, and every body had a good time.

But Mr. Coxe fell while he was dancing and broke his leg. It wasn't an awfully bad break, I believe, but any break is bad, in that it's very painful. And in the hot weather it must have been fierce. Imagine having to be bandaged up in bed July 4, 5 and 6 of this year! Mr. Coxe is being taken care of at home, instead of going to the hospital. He is getting along as well as possible, I hear.

THERE are certainly many attractive members of the Scott family in all its branches, but one of the very sweetest is little Anne Scott, the threeyear-old daughter of Rosalind and Hutchie Scott. She has one mass of golden curls and lovely blue eyes and pink cheeks, and is altogether the sort of baby one sees only in books, or in these days, the movies.

She has a further true Scott characteristic, that of being always surrounded by admirers wherever she goes. The other day she was down on the ach at Cape May talking to Harry McMichael and Alfred Sergeant, who were certainly very interested in her, and the wee bird who was nearby said it" wondered if she was entertaining them with one of her famous stories which, tradition says, cannot be beaten.

HAVE you ever been out to Paradise Farm? I went there the other day and it certainly made an impression on me. I wondered if many knew of it. for it certainly is one wonderful place. It's way, way out on the Main Line. Don't ask me the name of the station because I went in a motor, but it's quite far beyond Paoli and it's real

I went out with several of the women who are interested in the Country Week Association and I do not think I ever saw such happy children. While we were there, the Paradise Special arrived and it was pathetic to see the difference between the newly-arrived kiddies and those who had been there a The last arrivals were so pale and sickly compared with the others. But the joy of knowing that in less than a week those pale youngsters would be brown and jolly, too, certainly repays one for anything one might do to help
