

CITY SOLDIER HELPED TO GUARD PRESIDENT

Private Patrick Quinn Says Wilson Promised "His Best" on Prohibition Question

ADDRESSED PROTECTORS

Patrick A. Quinn, who was one of three Philadelphians in President Wilson's bodyguard, considers himself a lucky man to have been able to see and do the things which were permitted him on the liner George Washington when she brought the Chief Executive home.

The bodyguard was composed of 250 men, picked from many divisions and organizations, almost always for distinguished service or heroism. They joined the President in Paris and accompanied him to Brest.

On the Fourth of July, Private Quinn had the opportunity of hearing the President's speech. When some one suggested that all the bodyguard stand at attention during the speech, the President interposed and declared that he "just wanted to talk informally to the boys." So they all sat down in a row around him on the deck, with the less-favored ones on the outside, and enjoyed President Wilson's first speech on the quince train.

Private Quinn said that at the end of his brief talk, in which the President expressed sorrow that the men could not be home on the Fourth, the President said any who wished might ask him questions, and that several soldiers did ask, but always the same question: "What about prohibition?"

The President laughed and promised to "do my best." The work of the bodyguard ended at Hoboken. Private Quinn is one of three brothers, all of whom have had war records. He was attached to the railway transportation service, Thirtieth Grand Division, and from March, 1918, up to the signing of the armistice was employed in bringing troops up to the trenches. His division was the first to be employed in this duty. While thus employed he met his brother Michael, who was later wounded in action.

Private Quinn was twice wounded, once at Chateau Thierry and again at St. Mihiel. He was several times cited for bravery. The Quinns live at 1128 Porter street.

HOUSEWIVES FIGHT CURB MARKET BAN

Police Head Advises Them to Ask for Authorization From Councils

West Philadelphia residents are protesting against police regulations which have prohibited the operation of the Forty-ninth street curb market.

Farmers' wagons halted in Forty-ninth street just above Market street have been ordered away by a traffic sergeant. He said nothing would be permitted to be sold within the four-foot three-inch limit, because that space belonged to property owners.

"I am sorry," said Superintendent of Police Robinson today, "but we have to protect the interests of the storekeepers. If the people want the curb markets they must obtain permission for them from Councils. As it is the police have orders to prohibit selling from the street or wagons excepting regular curb markets which have been authorized by Councils."

Housewives insist that the storekeepers do not sell produce nor fruit nearly so cheap as the street markets. "We'll find a way out," they say, "if we have to get hold of a vacant lot."

TRANSFER BILL IS SIGNED

Mayor Approves Measure—Mothers' Pension Money is Provided

Mayor Smith has signed the $553,000 transfer ordinance, which includes an appropriation of $20,000 for mothers' pensions. The signing of the bill releases for payment pensions due to 440 women which have been held up pending the Mayor's signature.

The $20,000 appropriated by Councils is sufficient to meet only the pro rata payment of Philadelphia county to the mothers' assistance fund during the summer months. An appropriation of $300,000 was passed by the Legislature and Philadelphia must subscribe eight per cent of this sum. If widows in this city with dependent children are to receive the benefits of the act, approximately $1,000,000 must be subscribed by the city.

The bill also includes items for extra clerk hire. Fifteen thousand dollars is appropriated to the recorder of deeds for this purpose, $3500 to the city commissioner and $3000 to the recorder of taxes. Fifteen new jobs are created in the Board of Recreation.

"A pippin of a DRINK"

O-APPLE-O

O-APPLE-O is more than "something to drink". It is a beverage that makes you smack your lips with satisfaction—the real juice and flavor of sweet crisp apples—delightfully carbonated. A drink that wins you the first time you taste it.

O-APPLE-O satisfies. That's why it's so popular.

Drink all you want of O-APPLE-O. It's good for you. All the value of a sound apple is there—all the refreshing qualities of perfect carbonating.

You can get O-APPLE-O at those places where good things to eat and drink are sold. At the club, the soda fountain, and the restaurant. And if you want it by the case ask your grocer or druggist.
