Clara Kimball Young's First "Independent" Picture "The Better Wife"

CHAMBERS NOVEL FILMED

The announcement of the cast for the new Clara Kimball Young picture. entitled "The Better Wife." principal feature next week at the Stanley, occasioned comment among moving picture men. The cast is of the "all-star" Miss Young enlists in her support people whom other established moving picture stars might consider

Nigel Barrie, Lillian Walker, Kathlyn Williams. Barbara Tennant, little Bennie Alexander, Edward M. Kim-ball, Arthur Carew, Irving Carew, Irving Cummings, Elinor Hancock, H. G. Pennell, J. G. Underhill and John Steppling are among the sterling players chosen by Miss Young. Among them will be identified stars who have been presented at the head of their own

This picture, the first to be made by Miss Young for independent distribution, is a "commonwealth picture, although the production cost is being borne by Miss Young, Miss Young is a business woman, and her personal contact with exhibitors and exchangemen convinced her that too many good actors cannot be assembled in a cast, and that the day of the star's "hogging" a picture production has passed.

Recognized as one of the world's popular novelists, Robert W. Chambers numbers among many other successes his novel of "The Firing Line." The story first appeared as a seria in "The Saturday Evening Post in 1907 and a year later it was published with success in book form. The theme is an interesting one and its central character. Sheila Cardross, is one of the strongest beroines of the Chambers gal-

The picturization of the novel provides Irene Castle, dancer and entertainer, with an admirable role. This picture will be shown at the Arcadia next week. Robert V. Steele plays opposite the star and the support includes such well-known players as J. 11. Gilmore, Rudolph de Cordova, Frank Losee, Shaw Lovett, Isabel West and May Kitson. Charles Maigne, a brilliant scenarist and director, directed "The

A new twist is accomplished in the familiar "double role" in "Putting One Over," starring George Walsh, which will be the principal feature next week at the Victoria. Walsh plays the parts of Horace Barney and Jack Trevor, who resemble one another in every thing except the shades of bair. Horace is killed in a railroad wreck, and some scheming individuals, who were taking the mentally incompetent Horace to a sanitarium in order that they might enjoy his fortune, are now fearful that the money may pass into other hands. Jack Trevor is in the same train wreck, which is so well staged that it looks like the real thing. Jack awakens from his unconscious state dressed in the pajamas of Horace Barney and finding himself called by that name. The odd situation makes interesting doings for Jack, who brings disaster upon the with Hale Hamilton first half of cers; International president, Francis crooks, incidentally winning a girl and a fortune.

Orville Stamm Physical Instructor in Aviation and Submarine Unit

Among the vaudeville artists who volunteered their services to the govrument during the war was Orville Stamm, a young athlete whose feats of strength have made him a feature at traction on the stage for several years. Mr. Stamm enlisted in the navy and after the usual period of training, was assigned to duty as an A. B. abourd the submarine chaser 10-J.

Sailors are usually physically fit therefore Mr. Stamm's strength at tracted little more than passing com-ment. It was not until the benefit of naval relief fund, given in New York, in which Enrico Caruso and 000 seamen participated, that Stamm's particular merits were discovered. In he audience was an admiral, and part of the performance was physical exerise, in which Stamm participated.

As a result of this exhibition, the idmiral issued orders and Stamm was taken off the 10-J and appointed physical instructor of the aviation and sub-marine unit of the navy, and he was held responsible for the physical condition of about 600 of Uncle Sam's He will appear at Keith's next week in a demonstration of strength and physical culture exercise.
