The tomato is quite casy to can and will keep indefinitely if the usual precautions are taken. In order that a system may be arranged for doing this work we must first select a suitable utensil to use as a canner. There are many varieties of this kind upon the market and all may be depended upon to do efficient work if you will but follow the directions.

If you have not got a canner a wash boiler or a large kettle with a close-fitting lid may be used. It is necessary to make or purchase a rack, so that when the jars are placed in the boiler they will be at least one inch from the bottom of the boiler. Now, if you have used a knife when opening the jars to remove their contents no doubt the edges of the lid have been bent. Take a hammer and block of wood and go carefully over the edges to remedy this. The use of all-glass jars for all canning purposes is recommended rather than the old style jar lid with the porcelain lining, which frequently cracks or becomes loose and permits germs and bacteria to lodge between
