"You can't fool Americans any more about the supremacy and glamour of Europe," said Harvey Watts at the Rotary luncheon in the Bellevue-Stratford today. He spoke on "The Danger of Bolshevism."

"Before our 3,000,000 American soldiers went to Europe," said Mr. Watts, "they had grown quite used to hearing European art, European culture. European civilization set high above our own civilization. But their stay in Europe has dissipated all that.

"The American boys-not boys only, mind you, but plenty of physicians, lawyers, scholars, business men and whatnot—have seen Europe as tourists never have seen it. They've seen Europe as Europe really is, and they found Europe down at the heels. And they wanted to get-back to God's country again.

"And they come back to find a few extremists-radicals, parlor Bolsheviki. or whatever you want to call themtrying to prove that America is inferior. But they know now that never in our lowest levels have we American people ever lived on so low a level as the majority of people in Europe.

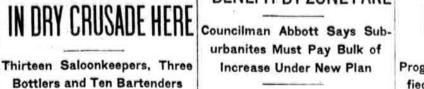

"That might make you think that there is no danger in this type of bolshevism, because our men will no longer be hoodwinked by these mental incapables who use a radical phraseology
