Linseed Oil Stain

To the Editor of the Woman's Pape: Dear Madam-I have a white georgette dress, but a stain of linseed oil and lime water, which I used for sunburn has spoiled it. Could you kindly tell me some simple emedy for taking the stain out without harming the dress? Also what is good to make the hair lighter? My hair is turning a light brown and I would like to have it a blond color.

A CONSTANT READER.

A little soap and water ought to remove the stain. But if it doesn't, use a very mild solution of javelle water. Don't permit it to remain on, but just a few seconds, as it is apt to eat into the fabric. Rinse after using.

Nothing except bleaching will keep the hair "golden" when it is turning brown and you would be very foolish to bleach your hair. Putting a little lemon juice in the rinse water brings out the golden lights in the hair and keeps it as light as possible without tampering

To the Editor of the Woman's Page: Dear Madam—I wonder if you would be good enough to reprint some of the games you printed some time ago-all played with burnt-out matches. I cut the clipping out and saved it, and I had the misfortune to lose it just before I wanted to use it.

MARIETTA. I am reprinting some of the games, and if you send a self-addressed envelope will be glad to let you have the rest of them.

A scramble is very amusing where dead matches of various lengths are hidden here and there or simply placed around the room where they can be seen, and all scramble to collect them. object can be to secure matches which, when laid together, will form the longest line, or simply to find one match which the hostess has purposely included, and which is larger than the Or large matches can count as two and small ones as one and the highest score win the prize.

Again a quantity of matches can be set afloat on a tub of water and then players fish for these. Each capture is made by slipping the little loop or noose which terminates one's fishing line over the match as it floats, and then, with a swift jerk, whipping it out of the pond.

For an outdoor party a good contest would consist in arranging rows of the matches stuck upright in the earth. The one whose line is longest, or which contains most matches at the end of the five-minute round, wins the race. When all have completed there may be cham-pionship races for a final prize.

Yet another match game which is very amusing is to place a dish of dead matches in the center of the table around which all sit, and each player is given a length of fine sewing cotton. All the cotton lengths must be of exactly the same number of inches, and when the signal is given all the players begin to tie the matches on their threads. The which contains most matche when "time is up" wins the prize.

A matching party would be another name for this social. Instead of giving prizes for each game-two can be given at the end of the evening to the man and girl who win the greatest number of games during the evening. Tally cards marked for each game won can be used.—Reprinted from the Mary Dawson Game Book.

2. If veils hurt the eyes and it is necessary to wear them at the seashore to prevent sunburn, they can be worn in the Turkish fashion, fastened at the back of the hat. Colored material that is apt to fade and shrink should be placed in hot salt water and allowed to stand until the water is cold, in order to set the color and shrink the material before it is made up. Placing a mirror where it will catch the light from an open doorway will lighten a small,
