It was only after most of it was over that Mary noticed that sev eral of the women she had been working with, and had indeed learned to like immensely, were putting too much color on their cheeks and dressing in a manner Well, they were different anyhow, she thought, and anyway they were personally very nice, and she did not meet them socially, and all the rest of it. And then the One and Only came home and asked her to go to luncheon next day at one of the leading hotels. And she fixed all up and went joyously with

They had scarcely been seated when she looked up and saw "Eloise," much becolored and muchly gowned, enter with a young man. She looked down quickly, but, bless your heart, Eloise saw her and rushed over and said, "Hello, Molly!" and gushed and giggled. Then along came Hortense and she, too, had much color, even more than Eloise. She also nodded in the most friendly manner, but the climax was finally reached. Evelyn appeared in a gown of purple with American Beauty figures thereon, and much, Oh! much color in the cheeks.

All this time the One and Only had ant quiet, saying nothing about the greetings. But when Evelyn had gushed past he leaned forward and said, "Say; Mary, what chorus have you been with while I was abroad?" NANCY WYNNE.
