

And So They Were Married

RUTH glanced from one to the other of the two girls. The little mother, plainly annoyed at the interference, and Helen frowned, immaculate in her tailored serge suit and smart little hat, giving Jane advice on the bathing of babies. Ruth forced back a smile, which she knew would be out of place, and waited to see what would happen. "I'll bathe her tonight," suggested Helen.

"All right," agreed Jane. "You have no idea what a nuisance it is getting home from a long day at the office and then doing the domestic stunt. I don't think I was ever cut out for a mother."

Helen had hurried out of the room and was now returning with a large basin of warm water.

"Where are the towels?" she asked tersely.

Jane fished out a clean towel from the pile which she had relegated to the floor and handed it over. Then she sat cross-legged looking like a naughty little girl herself and watched Helen handle little Joy.

"You know I've had a hard day at the office myself," Helen observed, as she deftly sponged off the gurgling baby.

"But you were cut out to be a mother," Helen defended Jane. "You like it."

Helen whined. The careless words had awakened dear memories, hopes which lay buried with Jim over in France. Ruth saw and understood, but she said nothing, and careless Jane went on speaking.

"This is the way I feel about children. If they're your own you love them, but that doesn't mean that you enjoy doing things for them."

Helen said nothing. She was dusting talcum powder all over the baby's soft body and slipping on a fresh little nightgown. When she finally held her up she exclaimed tenderly:

"Now she's all ready for bed, the darling. Where shall I put her, Jane?"

Jane scrambled to her feet and waved a hand deprecatingly toward the rumpled bed. "Put her in."

"You don't mean to say she sleeps there?"

"Why not?"

"A baby ought to have a place to sleep by itself."

Jane laughed her delicious laugh. "Why, Helen, you old maid, where do you think I'd get money for a crib? Joy is nearly two, anyway; she's not a baby any longer."

Ruth glanced toward the bed and wished herself that Joy needn't be put to bed there. It looked lumpy and the linen was anything but fresh. Somehow it detracted from Jane, this disregard for cleanliness, this carelessness of herself and her surroundings. Ruth thought to herself that she would have made a place for the baby to sleep if she had had to use a clothes basket.

Helen walked over and drew down the rumpled sheet, which pulled up under her hand. Then, with an impatient little exclamation, she carried the baby back to the couch, laid her down gently and proceeded to take the covers off the bed and make it up all fresh. When Joy was finally put into bed Helen breathed a sigh of relief.

Jane looked at Ruth laughingly. "Helen thinks I'm a perfect mess," she remarked. "Don't you, Helen?"

"I think you ought to clean up this room and keep it clean," Helen returned. "Really, Jane, you are incorrigible, you know. You oughtn't to allow yourself to be so slovenly."

"I'm going to reform now," Jane returned lightly. She did not seem to resent in the smallest degree Helen's criticism. It was part of her charm, this readiness to agree with Helen, to admit the truth of what she said. "You wait and see," she went on. "You won't know me after I get all finished. I'm going to take Saturday and Sunday this week and clean up this place. Then I can keep things all in order."

"And how about sewing the hooks and eyes and snappers on your clothes?" said Helen, with a look at Jane's dirty smock that was held together by a safety pin on the side.

"Those, too," said Jane, her eyes following Helen's glance. "You wait and see," she said again, with a shake of her head.

When Ruth and Helen finally rose to go, Ruth was more fascinated than ever with Jane's race, which she had said: "You must come and see me!" she said warmly.

"Oh, I'd love to, Mrs. Raymond," said Jane, with a warm flush and enthusiastic eyes. Her manner of accepting things, even criticism, was so engrossing that it made one anxious to do as much as possible, thought Ruth as she said good-bye. Out in the street, she turned to Helen quickly.

"How can you talk to her that way?"

"Wasn't that room a sight?" asked Helen. "Did you ever see anything like it? You mark my words, Ruth, that girl is going to have a bitter disappointment if she isn't careful. She's not only careless, but she makes no effort to overcome her slovenliness; she's lazy. And to think of a girl like that taking care of baby!"

FLIES TWO MILES A MINUTE

Pathfinder Pilot Sets Record From Buffalo to Mineola

New York, Aug. 23.—A record of approximately two miles a minute in a 440-mile flight from Buffalo to Mineola was made yesterday by J. D. Hill, a pilot aviator of Buffalo, who made the trip as a pathfinder for the Toronto-New York air race, which will take place Monday. The American Flying Club announced that the flight breaks all previous records for runs of a similar nature, although it has not been recorded officially. Pilot Hill made the trip in four hours and ten minutes.

Fourteen civilian planes will compete in Sunday's race in addition to the thirty-four government machines, which are not allowed to share in the prize money.

Accuse Girl Cigar Strikers

Trenton, Aug. 23.—Two young girls, Mary Rosko and Anna Mortosek, both of Newark, have been cited to appear before Vice Chancellor Backes next Tuesday to show cause why they should not be adjudged in contempt of court. It was charged the defendants violated an injunction, which was served upon them to cease molesting and otherwise interfering with employees of the L. & N. Cigar Company in Newark, where a strike is in progress. The two girls are charged with assaulting employees of the cigar company since the injunction papers were served.

When Miss Autumn Goes A-Choosing Frocks Turn Out Their Best

Taffeta comes out first for inspection, and lo, it is quite tailored—and so charmingly that Miss Autumn wonders why taffeta wasn't tailored before. But yet, it cannot forego little frills at the end of a skirt or a bit of lace at the neck in another frock.

There are collarless frocks with round necks or square, and taffeta dresses with collars or frills of lace, too. There is a variety of colors, also—taupe, blue, black, sand, gray and brown in several shades. $16.75 (for the frock of moire taffeta that is sketched) to $35.

is sure of winning Miss Autumn's approval, for lines are long and slender and belts are narrow, and very often frocks are delightfully embroidered with black silk. If there isn't a narrow belt, there is a straight bodice, but very few belts are over two inches wide.

The tricotine dress that is sketched is admirably tailored and will look well with a bright velvet toque. $37.50. Other dresses of tricotine are $28.75 to $55.

Light Georgette for Evening

White, flesh and pink Georgette are in many, many styles. Frocks are attractively beaded, tucked, draped or embroidered in wool. For dinner most any woman would be glad to slip into just such dresses. $25 to $45.

Summer Frocks Reduced to $3.50 and $5 take in scores of models in fine voile, crisp organdie and neat gingham. There are plain colors, stripes, fine checks and plaids, and the dresses can be worn for over a month yet. At the beginning of the season dresses like these sold for three times these prices.

(Market)

Satin, Serge and Dark Georgette

turn out some charming and many smart things for daytime wearing. Soft lines and drapery in satin, crisp tailoring in serge and beading and tucks in Georgette make variety enough to delight even Miss Autumn's critical tastes. Prices start at $20 for the serges.

Thousands of Yards of Cretonne at Average Savings of a Third 35c a Yard

Cretonnes in all-over verdure and floral patterns in artistic color combinations are a full 36 inches wide. Even at this low price the printing is the lasting kind that will bear washing.

50c a Yard

Many homekeepers have marveled at the unusual values of the cretonnes at 50c a yard. Old-fashioned prints, linen-finished cretonne, large, striking designs, heavy cretonne that is nice enough to use for upholstery, etc., make this lot the most noteworthy in the sale. Many of these exact patterns are selling elsewhere for three times this price.

These are but two groups of cretonnes, but there are many more quite as unusual at 45c, 60c, 75c, 85c and $1.25 a yard.

Terry Cloth in Ten Patterns Special $1.25 a Yard

Some of the most attractive door draperies can be made of terry cloth, as it is the same on both sides. The patterns are lovely and the cloth is 36 inches wide.

Drapery Material 75c—Worth Double

Old Gold Gray Green Blue

This is mercedized cotton drapery material with a fine woven cross stripe, and the value is evident. 50 inches wide.

Armure Special at $1 a Yard

Some of the colors and the figured armure are selling elsewhere for half as much again and even twice this special price.

It is 50 inches wide, heavy and finely woven and will make handsome draperies or be excellent for upholstery. There is green and old rose in the plain colors, with a little woven figure in the same shades. The figured is particularly attractive, as it has fine stripes of green alternated with tiny Dresden flowers, the sort that is seen on fine old furniture.

Curtain Scrim, Special at 20c a Yard

White, cream or ecru scrim with various tape borders is 36 inches wide.

Specials in Curtains

At $2.50 a pair, net curtains in six different all-over filet patterns (small and neat) are full length and generously wide. Fine marquisette curtains, with hemstitched borders, and many with insertions and edgings of imitation cluny lace are $2, $2.50, $2.75, $3 and $3.50 a pair.

Autumn Footwear Comes With a Brisk Step

Attractive slender lines, durable leathers, good workmanship and moderate prices—these are the typical Wanamaker standards of the Down Stairs Shoe Store.

Women's Oxford Ties

are made of black calfskin. Notice the imitation straight tip, which seems to be a favorite for Autumn. The soles are welted and there is a military heel. $6.50 a pair.

New High Shoes

are of black calfskin, with dark gray cloth tops that lace high. They, too, have imitation straight tips, with center perforations. The soles are welted and the heels are medium. $6.90 a pair.

These are but two of the many new footwear models that are arriving every day.

Black Pumps

Slender, high-heeled pumps on long lines are made of black calfskin or black patent leather. For dinner and evening frocks, these are appropriate and attractive, as well as for street dresses and suits. $5.90 a pair.
