

And So They Were Married

START THIS STORY TODAY

IT WAS JUST about this time, shortly after Jane had received the welcome news from Washington, that she met the boy. In all her life Jane had never really imagined just what kind of a man she wanted most to marry. Some girls have an ideal man that they have created out of their own imaginations, a man who, in spite of everything else that may happen in life, stands clear in their dreams as the man they might have married. Jane had never created an ideal of this kind. Jane lived life, she seldom dreamed about it. In the instance of her first leap at marriage in the dark, she had not stopped to consider results. It was the thing she wanted to do at the time, and that was sufficient. It was in the same way that this new man came into her life, suddenly and unexpectedly.

He was only a boy of twenty-six, and Jane was the most entrancing woman he had ever met. He had formed his knowledge of women from those he had grown up with in a small western city. These girls married when they were a certain age, settled down and had children, went about doing small social stunts and were thoroughly conventional types of womanhood. Jane was different. She was like a flame darting here and there. Her manner of talking, the way she shook the black hair out of her eyes, the tragic look that sometimes showed itself on her pointed little face, all these were different. He had never known that there were women like this and quite suddenly he wanted her.

And what about Jane herself? She was overwhelmed by his dog-like devotion, the homage that he gave her and that she had never received from any other man, the struggle to make both ends meet, and the care of her. It was so wonderful to shift responsibilities to another's shoulders, to feel that there was someone who cared and would protect her. Jane felt all of this before she felt any kind of response to the feeling that had been aroused in the heart of Bob West.

She had met him first at a dance given by returned soldiers, and she had danced with him and many others. When he had asked shyly at the end of the evening if he might take her home, she had been surprised, for he had made no impression at all on her. That had been the beginning of their friendship. He had called on her twice before she told him about Joy. It was characteristic of Jane that she had not mentioned Joy before. Joy was a memory of other days, a result of a horrible mistake, and Jane rebelled because she could not be so other girls who had met their lovers frankly with no dark shadow of the past to haunt their fresh young love.

They had been sitting in the dark parlor of the boarding house, and she, looking about at the dingy surroundings, at the glaring gas jet showing through the frost glass shade, suddenly became restless.

"Let's take a walk," she suggested. And walking down the hot street through swarms of playing children, she had mentioned Joy.

She told it all in a few words. There isn't much to tell, and she had no wish to dwell on it. But when she opened her eyes upon his face to see what he was thinking she was surprised and almost awed by the look he turned on her. It was filled with pity and compassion, with a passionate longing, they had entered the park and were in comparative seclusion, and he turned to her impulsively.

"Oh, Jane, if I could only make it up to you, all of it!"

It was then that Jane felt the first

OH! HA! HAWAIIANS LACK OF CLOTHING IS AWFUL!

Missionaries, However, Have Changed Custom—Today the Natives Are Outnumbered by Orientals—Buddhism Gains

HAWAIIANS are no longer numerically superior in their own islands, is the information that comes from the nationwide campaign headquarters of the Episcopal Church.

The Japanese far outnumber the Hawaiians and the worship of Buddha is gaining ground rapidly in spite of the work of the Christian missionaries, it is reported.

The Hawaiian Islands, "the Paradise of the Pacific," have a most cosmopolitan population. The Japanese, the Chinese, Koreans and other foreigners are greatly in excess of the native population.

Don't Like Clothes

The native Hawaiians have little use for clothing. However, the missionaries have dressed them, as they have dressed down their native vassals in a great number of other matters.

There is a story about a young maid who walked several miles to church to be married, carrying her trousseau and wearing little else but smiles, and who then put on her wedding gown outside the church, that she might parade grandly down the aisle. The clothes were useless to her for anything but for decoration.

She slipped a cool little hand into the big one that swung by her side, and his fingers closed over hers intimately. There was a consecration about this silent pledge that filled Jane's heart with peace. She felt as if she had reached a blessed haven of rest.

For a time they said nothing at all; they walked along in the cool darkness. Then they turned and walked slowly back to Jane's boarding house. The sidewalk of the street seemed more finally reached the house and she saw several people sitting on the stone steps she felt a certain dread of facing them. She had kept Bob as much away from the house as possible since she had known him. Any boarding house seems out of place for romance, and tonight as the two walked up the steps they were met by close scrutiny and no few giggles on the part of two shop girls who whispered something as they moved aside for the love to pass through.

In the darkened front parlor Bob took her gently in his arms and buried his face for a minute in her fluffy hair. His kiss on her lips when he left her was boyishly brief, and Jane was grateful for it. She loved him for the fact that he did not force his passion on her. Jane was rather familiar with the utter selfishness of man. She had been mar-

As it was the women's privilege not to wear any clothes, it was her duty to propose marriage, according to Hawaiian rules of etiquette. "None of the girls has asked me yet," replied one fine-looking Hawaiian youth, when asked by an American why he never married.

Wore Socks and Hat

It is recorded that when the first missionaries arrived from Boston in the brig Thaddeus, years ago, that the refined senses of the New England women in the party were greatly shocked when, as the brig lay at anchor in Kailua bay, King Liholiho came on shipboard to pay his respects and in a "narrow waist girdle, a green silk scarf thrown over his shoulders, a necklace of large beads and a crown of scarlet feathers."

Soon after the missionaries had got settled in their own house on shore the king, accompanied by his five wives, all of them without one stitch of clothing, came to visit them again. It was hinted that he would receive more cordial welcome if he should don a different style of dress when he called. He returned the next day in an elaborate costume consisting of silk stockings and a cocked hat.

And now we ask you: Did you ever see so many pretty girls in your life as those who helped in the Liberty Loan campaigns in Philadelphia town and its outlying districts? The daughters of today are living strictly up to the high standards set for them by the belles of yesterday!

It is in recognition of the Girl Beauty of the Nation, Home, now touring this country, will give a concert in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, October 17. This is the first time in history that any portion of the Pope's choir has made a foreign tour.

Sistine Choristers to Sing Here
Music-lovers in Philadelphia will shortly have an opportunity to hear a quartet from the world's most celebrated choir. It has been announced that the Sistine Chapel Choir (Quartet of the Vatican, Rome, now touring this country, will give a concert in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, October 17. This is the first time in history that any portion of the Pope's choir has made a foreign tour.

$5 Invested in Vogue
Will Save You $500

The instant the war was over, Paris began to dance, and, curiously enough, the dance has determined the mode of even the most sedate autumn street frock. In repose, the silhouette remains slim. But the instant one moves—walking, dancing, crossing a room—it must have grace and flow of line.

How can you get that floating effect? How should you stand when you wear it? How can you know the favored colors? How can you assure yourself added distinction of dress and save yourself from misguided or haphazard buying?

The secret is not more money. It is Vogue's authoritative, advance fashion advice.

The gown you buy and never wear is the really expensive gown. Gloves, boots, hats, that miss being exactly what you want are the ones that cost more than you can afford.

GIRLS OF CITY LEAD NATION IN BEAUTY

Were Famous in Colonial Times. Now Evening Public Ledger Shows Those of Today

They may talk of New York, Baltimore and Washington, but when it comes to pretty girls, give me Philadelphia!

Ever hear any one say that? It's true, Philadelphia always has been noted for its beautiful women.

Ever since the days of William Penn, at which time, a history of the city tells us, "old maids were not to be met with, and the children were generally well favored and beautiful to behold," Philadelphia has been distinguished for the loveliness of her daughters.

The fame of Peggy Shippen needs no annotation, and the piquant and demure Quakeress, Sally Wister, and others of that period are equally well known.

Then there was Miss Emily Schamburg, the never-to-be-forgotten beauty who made Philadelphia famous in the Civil War times. In fact, each generation has yielded its toll of lovely women—which brings us to today.

And now we ask you: Did you ever see so many pretty girls in your life as those who helped in the Liberty Loan campaigns in Philadelphia town and its outlying districts? The daughters of today are living strictly up to the high standards set for them by the belles of yesterday!

A Little House Can Be a

to the woman who has never fitted out a house before. What will make a small living room look roomy? Which type of furniture is best for a dining room? How can a bedroom be made cheery and fresh without expensive furniture? What kind of pictures are best to hang on the walls of a room with a rather low ceiling?

These are but a few of the questions that will perplex, and the answer to all of them is

The Little House of Home Ideas

Here is a series of seven little rooms furnished in perfect taste, yet without the expenditure of a great deal of money. The furniture is Wanamaker furniture throughout and through, of good lines, excellently proportioned and built to last for many years.
