DHILADELPHIA'S heart was so deeply touched by the sacrifice made by William Tanner, of Hubbard's Wood, Ill., who died with his wife rather than stand by and see her killed after he found he could not save her that the story is still being discussed here today. As Tanner was the father of three children, his sacrifice presented a problem in heroism and in duty which there was wide disagreement.

Numerous men and women, whe asked what they thought of Tanner's net in standing with his wife on the railroad track until the oncoming train crushed beth to death, were unwilling to express an opinion. They said it was such an involved problem of loyalt) as a husband and duty as a father that they could not pass judgment.

JEWELER ROUTS THUGS AT REVOLVER'S POINT

Market Street Storekeeper Turns Tables on Bandits.

Four bandits who tried to hold up the ewelry store at 1738 Market street last night were routed by Samuel S. Hass, the proprietor, although two of the robbers pointed revolvers at Hans and threatened to kill him unless he submitted. In telling the story Haas said!

"Four men entered the store, walking in single file. Two of the men drew revolvers and ordered me to throw up my hands. I dropped back of the counter and pulled out a loaded revolver. Using the cash register as & "I was so frightened the barrel of the revolver rattled against the cash register. The thieves must have thought ion. One of the few women was willing to frankly utter this opinion in the rear broke for the door and the others followed. On their way to the door they grabbed the five watches. they were about to be killed. A man
