T AM so glad Polly Thayer is coming out this year. But I understand she is not going to give up her violin lesons in spite of the parties. It would be a shame for her to do that, but trust Polly not to give them up. She does love music and that violin! I have seen her at times look positively inspired while playing, and remember at one orchestra concert last year being more entertained in watching her entranced expression than I was by the orches and it was a wonderful symphony that afternoon, too. Polly is to be introduced on October And Peggy and Lois Cassatt Thayer will, of course, receive. Peggy, you know, had no "bringing out" beause she arrived at that interesting age just after we went into the war and she plunged right into nursing and war-working and had no time for making her debut, though many, many small parties were given for her. She is a very great favorite. Both of the Thavers are extremely pretty and vivacious. They ought to be, ought they not? Their mother is so very pretty and their father, the late John B. Thayer, was very good looking.

Jack and Fred, the two sons, were on other side in the war, but both are back safe now. Jack, you remember, married Lois Cassatt before he went to France. That was nearly two years ako, was it not? They have a dear little baby boy about six months old NANCY WYNNE.

EAT A TINY VITAMINE

Necessary-No One Has Ever Seen One Yet

Did you eat your ration of vitamines today? Dr. W. D. Richardson, of Chicago ecturer in the food section of American Chemical Society, said it's a matter of vital importance that you do eat your daily ration. "Nobody has ever seen a vitamine," said the doctor, "but it is in certain foods. It's that property in food which makes folks grow. Children couldn't grow if they didn't eat it, and adults would suffer severe nervous disorders without it.

"The aboriginal man ate by instinct, then he ate by habit. Later he qualified his diet with the aid of chemical analysis by scientists, and nowadays, and this is the newest development, he is eating by biological analysis.

"Vitamines are in eggs and milk in great quantities and also in green things. Casimir Funk discovered vitamine by studying the oriental disease known as beri-beri, a nervous sickness common among rice eating peoples. He found that the diet of the happened several years ago, but in this Orientals is practically limited to what case the young ady was alone and she, too, caught her foot in a frog of is known as polished rice, which is rice with the husks shredded or polished

> "He fed some of this polished rice to pigeons and learned that they de veloped beri-beri. Then he made solution of the husks of the rice and gave the sick pigeons a drop or two of the solution. The symptoms of beriberi disappeared almost immediately.
> "Casimir Funk then decided that what was lacking in the polished rice was present in the husks, and he called that which was lacking and so necessary to the food, vitamine."
