

JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Chats of the Things People Wear—She Hears That the Herbert Loyds Are Back From Europe—Other Bits of Gossip

IT DOES please me so to see that people are going back to wearing lovely fluffy things these days. Don't you like it, too? And the latest idea which had been carried out through the summer and early fall, that of wearing a scarf of tulle to match your frock, is one of the most becoming fashions ever started. I saw Miss Juliana Wood on Broad street the other day wearing a dark blue crepe de chine gown and small hat with a blue tulle scarf.

Gertrude Heckscher, at the cardinal's official visit to the Belgian relief on Friday, had a dark blue tulle scarf around her neck, and it certainly was becoming to her. I do think she has good looking. Mrs. Russell Duane, who has just returned from the West, wore a black scarf, too.

AS TO renovating small houses, have you heard of the unique thing that Teddy Gilchrist is doing? He has bought a house on Latimer street between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, and is transforming it into an architectural studio, whatever that may be. As he is the Woodward estate architect, the place is likely to be most attractive.

I NEVER hear of a small house like that, that I do not think of a bride I once visited there. She has been married now about ten years and has quite a family. But she had taken over of these small streets which had six rooms altogether and if you'll believe me, she had exactly seven maid. And every room I went into I fell over. Two served us with tea and chocolate cake and one ran to the door to pay for laundry and I'll never forget it. It was all I could do to get out without screaming. Whatever made her do it do you suppose?

THE polo at the Country Club on Saturday afternoon was even more colorful and crowded than the week before. There was only standing room left and people were pushing in every where to get a view. The game was exciting; several men were thrown, and one of the riders nearly went off with the goal post.

Mrs. and Mrs. Joe Duhany were there. Ella looking very smart in a blue tulle-trimmed hat, blue dress with a square-cut white collar, and black suede shoes. Christine and Katherine Chambers were together. Christine had on an original little toque with a circular arrangement of flat features on the crown, and she wore a taupe-colored cape with it. Katherine was dressed in blue. They were both very talented and popular girls.

Mrs. Ursula Bullitt, who, you remember, was Miss Ingersoll, looked particularly lovely. She had on a white straw hat and long white cape over a white dress. You can imagine how stunning such a costume would be with her fair skin and blonde hair.

Margaret Robbins had on a very interesting black toque and a black suit with a little white thread running through it. She was abroad nursing during the war, part of the time in France and then afterward in the Balkans, you remember.

DID you know that the Herbert Loyds are home again at Bod-Ljyd, their Bryn Mawr home? They have been in Europe for several months. Mr. Lloyd had to go over on business and Mrs. Lloyd went along and while he went to the continent she stayed with her sister in London. Mrs. Lloyd was Miss Dorothy Ford, you remember, and her sister married an Englishman.

THE Van Speke Altons are still in this country, but expect to return to England next month. Mrs. Alton was a student at one of the large colleges (Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Cornell, take your choice), some distance away from here, who thought very highly of her. So highly, in fact, that her name was continually in his conversation, her picture in his room and herself in his thoughts. He graduated and returned to college, and she came to become engaged to a most attractive girl from the far West.

And this year Patricia's kid brother is starting in at that self-same college. And, by a singular coincidence, the only room he could find anywhere is in the house where his sister's former admirer lived in college. He called her when he told the landlady his name and she said: "I don't know why it is, but your name certainly does seem familiar to me!"

BANK ACCOUNTS GIVE DATA ON CAMPUS LIFE

Richer Penn Students Said to Have Small Balance Most of Time The bank accounts of students make an extremely interesting study, according to L. E. Wright, banker, directing the accounts of the matriculates of the University of Pennsylvania. The banking of these young men and women offers interesting information on campus life, he says. The accounts of the poorest student usually are the most profitable for the banking institution. Mr. Wright contends, for, although the richer man deposits and draws on a much larger sum, he scarcely has a balance most of the time. The poor boy, when he arrives at the University, pays all his bills and then deposits what he has left in the bank. He lives from hand to mouth, often earning his living expenses. On the other hand, the very rich banker says, the rich boy deposits large remittances from his "dad," but he soon melts away the balance his pass-book shows. It has been the case at the University that some boys have received remittances large enough to make it possible for them to own an automobile before the year is over. The foreign students, those coming from Japan, China, Porto Rico and Europe, make the largest deposits, for most of them bring with them sufficient funds, amounting sometimes to several thousand dollars, to meet their expenses for the entire course. They handle their accounts very carefully and are conservative spenders. Several thousand of the total number of students enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania are residents of Philadelphia and vicinity. They usually live at home and do not require a University banking account. Of those non-Philadelphia students, the greatest majority open checking accounts. More than 2000 will probably be taken care of at the University's banking institution this year, it was stated.

READERS VIEWPOINT

Letters to the Editor on Current Topics Sheriff Aids Tenants To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—In the present crisis due to the shortage of houses in Philadelphia and the speculation and profiteering resulting therefrom, the sheriff is the only public official who has done anything to relieve the situation. Had it not been for the humane attitude maintained by the sheriff, and his solicitor, Mr. Russell, there is no doubt that the limits of the orgy of speculation might have gone. It has recently been charged by Mr. Hepburn, counsel for the Philadelphia real estate board, that the attitude of the sheriff in refusing to be made the tool of the real estate profiteers, and in allowing tenants faced with eviction from the street with no place to go sufficient time to find other quarters, was inspired by political motives and done for political advantage. The criticism of the representative of the real estate board is inconsistent with the claims they have been making. That the members of the board were not protesting, that they were not seeking to put any one out of their homes, that they did not desire to distress the tenants of Philadelphia, that they were the friends of these tenants from whom they made their living and were as much the foe of the profiteers as we were. Why, then, do they so bitterly criticize the sheriff when he refuses to throw decent, law-abiding citizens out of their homes in order that some gambler may advertise "immediate possession"? We believe it our duty to state that the attitude of the sheriff is largely due to the representations made to Mr. Russell by officers of the Tenants' Protective Association on behalf of the two hundred and some thousand tenants of Philadelphia. We believe that the charges made by Mr. Hepburn are absolutely untrue and are merely a cowardly attempt to throw discredit on the only public official who has had sufficient vision and courage to interpret the law in accordance with broad principles of justice and humanity, rather than narrow legal technicalities. If such men are not given the support of the press and public, there is no hope of relief from a situation which is fraught with more dangerous consequences to the community than any other form of profiteering. H. E. CORYELL, Vice president, Tenants' Protective Association of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, September 25.
