After a man has definitely broken with a girl, and has asked her to release him from their engagement, what does she owe to him if he asks her to take him back? Julia Grant faced this question after Dan Carson had told her he loved another woman. Julia had gone into a hospital to try and forget her hurt in hard work, and Dan in the meantime had found that the other woman was only playing with him. Julia's first wild grief and torment of mind were over and she felt that Dan needed her. She felt, too, that she still loved him, and 5 she gave him her promise for the she gave him her promise for the

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CT WAS in this frame of mind with Dick Nugent constantly waylaying her for a possible flirtation, with Grace, I hardly ever see you, and when I do Merritt stealing around the place in obvious disgrace and as white as death, and with her own feelings upset and almost terrifying in their strangeness, that Julia first met Dan's suggestion Chat she plan to give up her work and let married immediately.

It was at the house one evening and simply had not existed for her until the two were sitting in the stiff, gloomy he told her that he leved another back parlor. Julia had grown to have woman. certain dread of these evenings with Dan and because she did not understand her decision herself she felt like a criminal. It was all right when Lucy and one of her friends dropped in and they all chatted logether, but the moment Julia and Dan bere left alone together Julia began b be nervous.

Conversation had languished between frem this evening when Dan suddenly

"Don't you think we'd better come to some understanding, Julia?' Julia started guiltily. "What do 'I mean about our relations. We haven't discussed anything about our marriage; we haven't made any plans and we haven't talked about your giving up your work at the hospital."

"Giving up my work? I didn't know there was any question about that."

"But you knew it must come some Julia was silent. "Didn't you?" "I really hadn't thought about it,

"Well, you will when we decide on the date for the wedding." Dan had hesitated about speaking of the date for the wedding. He knew so well that any memory of a wedding day would be ampleasant for Julia, and that he would be in anything but a favorable light. "Let's make it soon." He said impulsively. "There is no reason why we should wait."

Julia was thinking quickly. She did not want to hurry the marriage. She could not think of marrying until her mind was more at ease about matters than it was at present. This time when she set her wedding day, there must be no mistake.

"There is no reason why we should hurry matters," julia said finally.

Dan looked at her in surprise. Julia who had always acceded to him in everything was actualy setting up her will against his. Once she had willing to do anything he wanted her to do. Well, he supposed he had himself to thank for her present attitude for the change in her nature, and he must be patient no matter what it cost him. He loved Julia, he wanted her more than anything in the world. It had cost him a great deal to discover the fact, but he was sure of it now.

Dan gulped down a desire to press her, to try and persuade her to his way of thinking, but something told him that it would not be wise and he re-
