DAINTY INFORMAL SUPPERS SUGGESTED BY MRS. WILSON

The Evening Meal on Sunday Gives an Ideal Chance for Mother to Meet the Children's School Friends

Some Easy Recipes for Tasty Dishes That Are Appropriate for These Informal Affairs

By MRS. M. A. WILSON

THE modern hostess may entertain Sunday evening and serve a little informal supper without the aid of a maid. This delightful way of having a friend or two to sup with you when the family is at home will appeal to the busy housewife and will delight the family.

The guest may be some old crone of father's or perhaps some friend of Tom's or Ethel's or an old school-mate of mother's, who may wish to meet the family when they are together, and right here let me suggest to the mothers that these little Sunday-night suppers is a splendid means of knowing the friends of your boys and girls, for you must realize that it is the real ambition of each boy and girl to have their chosen friends dine with them.

It will also give the housewife a splendid chance to know just who her children's companions are. And if you will introduce some of the little niceties that go a long way to lend elegance to the humblest table you will not only teach your children that unpurchasable commodity, nice table manners, but the young people will naturally avoid making friends with undesirable companions or those whom they would feel ashamed of in their own homes and at their own tables.

The chafing dish and the casserole dish may be featured at these little informal meals with great success and this can be made a time to teach daughter how successfully to make attractive Sunday night suppers.

Chocolate Custard One and one-half cups of milk, one-half cup of sugar, seven tablespoons of cornstarch, one-half cup of cocoa.

Stir to dissolve thoroughly the starch and then bring to a boil and cook slowly for six minutes. Now rinse the custard cups with cold water and drain well. A TEMPTING SUPPER DISH

Salmon salad with mayonnaise dressing is a delicious addition to the evening meal. Mrs. Wilson tells in this article how to mix an eggless mayonnaise dressing which is easy to make, delicate to eat and can be kept for several weeks.

- Eggless Mayonnaise Place in a vegetable dish or on a soup plate. Two tablespoons of evaporated milk. One-half teaspoon of mustard, one-half teaspoon of paprika. Beat to mix thoroughly and then add one cup of salad oil, beating hard while adding the oil. When thick and creamy add one teaspoon of sugar, three-quarters teaspoon of salt, one teaspoon of vinegar or lemon juice.

Beat to blend. The oil may be added much faster in making this dressing than when it is made with the yolk of egg, and if it is placed in a fruit jar and covered and set in a cool place it will keep for three weeks.

Shrimp and Celery Newburg Open a can of shrimp and turn into a bowl. Break into small pieces. Chop fine sufficient celery to measure one cup and chop one green and one red pepper. Place the celery and peppers in a saucepan and cover with water and cook until tender. Drain well. Now place in a chafing dish two and one-half cups of thick cream sauce and one well-beaten egg. Stir to blend thoroughly, add

Two teaspoons of salt, one teaspoon of paprika, one-quarter teaspoon of mustard, the prepared celery and pepper, the shrimp. Heat slowly, stirring frequently with a fork to prevent the Newburg from scorching and when smoking hot serve on toast.

Banana Shortcake Place in a mixing bowl one cup of flour, one-half teaspoon of salt, two teaspoons of baking powder, five tablespoons of sugar, three tablespoons of shortening, one-half cup of water.

Mix and spread in well-greased and floured deep layer-cake pans and cover the top with the thinly sliced bananas. Bake in a moderate oven for twenty-five minutes. Cool and cover with more freshly sliced bananas and then serve with fruit whip.

Barbecue of Ham Place in a chafing dish one-half glass of currant or grape jelly, juice of one-half lemon, four tablespoons of catsup, one tablespoon of Worcestershire sauce.

The Testing of Julia Grant By HAZEL DEVO BACHELOR Copyright, 1919, by Public Ledger Co. In Which Julia Asks Dr. Norville to Intercede for Grace Merritt

READ THIS FIRST Dan Carson, having jilted Julia Grant for Nancy Crowne, discovers too late that Nancy has been playing with him. He decides to let the Grant family believe that he has discovered his love for Julia after it is too late, and they all sympathize with him but Julia's father. In the meantime Julia has gone into a hospital to take the training there, and her beauty has attracted one of the internes and has made an enemy of one of the nurses. Julia sees this nurse go out against orders, and it is discovered by the superintendent, Grace Merritt accuses Julia of having

SAW GO ON WITH THE STORY In hospital rules are inexorable. Therefore, Julia, no matter how sorry she felt for Grace Merritt, could have done nothing about it. The other nurses gathered in little groups and talked about it. Only Julia said nothing. Her recent suffering had given her an understanding of Grace Merritt, and Grace's words about a man's fickleness had struck home in Julia's heart. The day following Julia's talk with Grace Merritt, Julia met had Dick Nugent in the hall. He looked handsomer than ever, but Julia, with a curt nod, passed him by, or tried to. He stopped her laughingly. "Please let me pass." "I want to talk to you."

THE temptation to start this adventure with an original little remark about cold mornings and soft, warm bathrobes is almost irresistible. You know—cold days are here again, and what a comfort it is to have a nice bathrobe to slip into as you get out of bed. But no, not for nothing have I studied books on will power. I shall begin my adventure thus—a warm, cuddly bathrobe is a comfort, if it is made right, and does not cost too much. If you make it yourself, you can get just the pattern you like best and can choose your material from a wealth of designs. One shop has built after half of nice fuzzy, warm-looking blanket material—twenty-seven inches wide—for seventy-five cents a yard.

THE WOMAN WHO FORGETS THE PEOPLE BEHIND HER

Has So Much Spare Time That She Wastes Most of a Noon Hour for Some One Else

THE long line waiting in front of the information window in the station at the noon hour was keenly interested in a woman near the head of the slow-moving procession, who seemed to be in a great hurry. She gave the impression that her train was ready to pull out at any minute and that she must find out about something most important before rushing off to get aboard. Every time the crowd moved forward a step she attempted to make it two steps by bumping up close into the person ahead of her.

At last, to the relief of all who were watching her, and almost every one in line was, she reached the window. With a sigh of relief she settled her bag upon the floor beside her, placed her arms comfortably on the counter and remarked affably to the busy, hurried clerk behind the window. "I want a timetable, please." "Where to, madam?" he asked briskly. "The South," she replied, unbuttoning her glove and consulting her wrist watch. "Well, the South is a pretty big place, madam. What part of the South?" "Oh, Maryland," was the absent-minded answer, as she set her watch by the big station clock. "Where in Maryland?" "Why, Baltimore," she exclaimed in a why-do-you-ask-so-many-questions tone. And she got her timetable. Clapping her glove carefully and picking up her bag, she moved off unhurriedly, leaving some dozen or two trite the narrow aisle of the Pullman telling the porter that there must be another chair that she can have, in spite of his repeated assurances that there is not, while the crowd behind her vainly tries to get past her to the fast disappearing seats in the day coach beyond?

I wonder if she ever gets a picture of herself—the woman who keeps the line waiting, who powders her nose at the lunch counter while the business woman waiting to take her place continues to wait? And if she does, does she see herself a martyr to people behind her who try to make her hurry? I'm sure she doesn't see herself through the darkened glasses of those whom she keeps waiting. In fact, I doubt whether she sees herself at all—she just sees the woman she thinks she is.
