The Testing of Julia Grant

By HAZEL DEYO BATCHELOR

In Which Julia Does Not Find Great Happiness in Her Reinstatement

READ THIS FIRST

There is no disillusionment so com-plete as a girl's disappointment in the man she loves. Julia Grant loved Dan Carson, and thought he loved her until he confessed his infatuation for another woman, then Julia released him from their apparent. But another woman, then Julia released him from their engagement. But when Dan discovered that the other woman was only playing with him, he wanted Julia back, Julia had taken up nursing and was trying to forget. What would you have done? Would you have taken back a man who had east you off for some one clse? Julia Grant did just that. Moreover she interceded with the authorities of the hospital on the behalf of a nurse who was unfriendly to her, for the simple reason that Grace has been treated just as she was, by a man.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

DAN had been walking to and from the hospital with Julia these days. He wore an air of proud possession, and greated Julia as though she were something precious. Julia, unused to attention of this kind since her hospital training, felt strangely dependent and a Mittle bit uncomfortable. She had tried to shake off this feeling, but she found it impossible, the sense of unreality that had heng every here all that evening was over here all that evening was over more reinstated, she would all her might to feel as though she were, but it seemed impossible. As for Dan he was happy and contented. He had made a mistake and rectified it; therefore he reasoned that it should be forgotten and he believed that Julia had forgotten it. What he wanted next was to oust Julia from this odious work of hers which claimed all her time. He had no intention of allowing her to keep Imagination. She thought of it as a liv-ing thing and she herself was a part of its great machinery, a small cog in an enormous wheel. At night, when she went to bed she tried to think, but she was too utterly tired, and she fell asleep trying to analyze her own feelings. The next morning after Grace Merritt had sought Julia out. Julia re-membered the whole conversation between them.

"I suppose I have you to thank for everything," Grace had said tonelessly. There was so little life in her words that Julia felt the hoplessness in the girl's heart.

"Dick Nugent told me that you went to Doctor Norville," Grace went on. "I'm not going to be suspended but they have added three months on to my time and of course I can't have any liberties. I don't see why you did it," she finished. Julia knew why she had done it. Be-as to inform me through your column how to remove stains of blood from a bule taffera coat? A child's nosebled stained the front of the coat. I used carbon tetrachloride but the stain still had hang over her all that evening was once more reinstated, she would simply would not lift.

To tell the truth Julia was not happy. She wanted to be, she was trying with all her might to feel as though she were, but it seemed impossible. As for Dan remains—of course it removed some but it is still very noticeable. Thank you for any information that will help me. The color is a French blue. H. W.

was to oust Julia from this odious work of hers which claimed all her time. He had no intention of allowing her to keep en here at the hospital. That was out of the question. Besides, he wanted ten early marriage.

However, he did not realize how different Julia really was. She had undered to the hospital when she had needed help, and it had stretched out comforting arms to her. It had not given her ease of body, but it had given her work, hard work from morning until night, and she had learned the golace of seeking rest aching in every bone, too tired to think.

It is not necessary to ask the children's fathers, and they would probably not be able to come anyhow. Ice cream and cake would be the nicest thing to serve for both mothers and children. Have lady fingers and small cakes that will be more wholesome for the youngsters than ieed cake. If you like, you might have a layer cake for the grownups. And he sure to have some little crepe paper favor for the children to take home to show to Daddy, for that is half the joy of a party for them. Hallowe en favors would be just right for that date. I hope your party will be a great success.

Mennen Cream Dentifrice is made to accomplish results. It is based on the latest discoveries of dental science. It really protects teeth by improving the flow of saliva-Nature's guardian of teeth. It is scientific and very expensive to make.

But Mennen's is so concentrated that a tiny bit is enough. One half inch cleans teeth perfectly, breaks down tartar formations and removes tobacco stains.

For this reason, Mennen's is really extremely inexpensive.

In a broader sense it is highly economical for it saves teeth. Teeth are worth more than money.
