The "irreconcilables" are in the majority on the Republican side of the Senate. They constitute a minority of both parties. Their only grain of consolation in yesterday's vote was extracted from the fact that more than enough senators to prevent ratification voted for the amendment.

Lodge Seeks to Eliminate Shantang

Senator Lodge announced, following the rejection of the amendment, be would move later to eliminate the entire Shantung provisions from the treaty. This proposal differs from the amendment, in that the anemalment proposed to substitute China for Japan wherever the latter appeared. Senator Lodge now would have the whole mutter stricken from the treaty.

Labor and the people bad a preponderance of oratorical and argumentative ability on their side.

In opposition to the resolution were members of the employers' group, who defended their attitude with all the disputative power at their command. These included Frederick P. Fish, the group chairman and chairman of the Nat'onal Industrial Board: Homer L. Ferguson, head of the Newport News Shipbuilding Company; J. W. O'Lenry, president of the National Metal Trades Ausociation, and Herbert F. Perkins of the International Harvester Company.

of the International Harvester Company.

The entire afternoon session was given to the discussion. Mr. Fish, one of the two principal speakers for the employers, declared emphatically that under no circumstances could be accept the resolution. He spoke for twenty minutes and his words, unless he reverses himself, sounded the death knell for collective bargaining, one of the most vital and important subjects scheduled for discussion and adjustment by the conference.

But F. H. Fish, employer, was not more positive in his position than was W. D. Mahon, trade unionist, defaunt in his assertions. Mr. Mahon assumed the air of a prosecuting attorney with the employers' group in the prisoner's dock. His flamboyant declaration of what he proposed to stand for as a trade unionist was not calculated to conciliate the "capitalists," as he termed them. His artitude and manner were in bad taste when such vital questions called for tast and diplomacy.

Foreing Employers to Wall Foreing Employers to Wall

It was Mahon's speech that gave empinsis to the belief that the labor group was deliberately forcing the employers against the wall. That it was a tactical scheme to discredit them before the public and throw the edium of failure, if there be failure, of the enference, upon that marticular group. The developments, in this instance, emparize the conclusions in nervious discrebables that there has been a closer efficie and unity of purpose between the public's group and the labor group from at isigns between the public's group and the labor group from at isigns between the employers and

Whatever the outcome of this contest over the right to collective bargaining, and, however much the attitude of the people's group may afford comfort to the labor group, it will not avail them when the question of adjudicating the steel strike comes to the front.

Morrison, who is acting head of the laborites in the absence of Mr. Gompers, is leaning on a broken reed if he fancies that the people's group will indorse the strike resolution.

The arguments advanced by the emsargaining are, that the other groups are endeavoring to force them to nevent, or as one of their speakers expressed it, to crain down their throats a proposition that is unfoir and un-American; that an indorsement of it would automatically force nonunion employes into the union ranks; that would encourage the unionization of twelve years ago, was devoted largely to efforts of the prosecution to establish the identity of the body dug up from a shallow grave under the Isadore church last year as that of the missing nun, and to establishing a motive for the alleged crime.

Two physicians who examined the body testified to finding a fracture of the skull, apparently caused by a blow on the head. They also described the skeleton as that of a woman about five feet two inches in height. Various articles of a nun's habit, including a crucifix, an iron ring, a girdle and fragments of a robe, taken from the grave, were identified by sisters of the Felician order as peculiar to their sisterhood.
