DIG DEEP FOR BODY OF VANISHED CHILD

Searchers Continue Excavations at Hammonton, Thinking Kidnappers Buried Boy

EXPERTS EXAMINE LETTER

Digging in the vicinity of the deserted house near Hammonton, N. J., where it is thought kidnappers may have buried the body of Billy Dansey, two and a half years old, who has been missing nine days, was resumed today by searching parties.

The digging started yesterday when searchers noticed that the ground had been disturbed in several places close to the abandoned building, in which it is believed the Dansey child was held captive on the afternoon and night after he was stolen.

While the digging is going on today Walter Venier, head of the Hammonton volunteer fire department, will try to pump water from the bogs close to the Dansey home, so that the ground may be examined. Some of the residents of Hammonton believe the child may have fallen into a pool of water.

Experts Examine Letter

Experts in handwriting in Atlantic City examined the letter received by Mrs. Hercules Dansey, mother of Billy Dansey, and declared that the handwriting was that of a woman who had evidently attempted to make a ransom as though it had been written by a man. The letter, which was mailed in Newark, N. J., stated that the child was safe and would be "west of the Rockies" in five days, where he would be given an education and a "more brilliant future" than the child's own parents could give him.

"The mother of little 'Bunny' White, grandson of Congressman Edward H. White, of Hammonton, is still in fear that there may be some attempt to steal her little boy. In the letter to Mrs. Dansey the writer declared the child had been taken in mistake for the 'White brat'."

Other Child Guarded

Because of these statements the parents of the White child are taking every precaution to guard the boy against harm. The White child bears an unusual resemblance to the Dansey boy, as some persons say they saw Billy Dansey playing in front of the White home on the day of his disappearance, the authorities in Hammonton attach importance to the letter writer's statement that the missing child was stolen by mistake.

John T. Wilson, chief of the Atlantic county detectives, questioned White in an effort to learn the names of persons who might have had enough ill feeling against him to avenge the seizure by kidnapping his child. White is chairman of the law and order committee of Hammonton and his recent activities in prosecuting disorderly strikers and bootleggers are attributed by many a possible reason for the attempt to steal his child.

Try to Trace Papers

Detectives are making an effort to trace the origin of the paper on which the letter to Mrs. Dansey was written, as the paper is of a peculiar texture.

Following a telephone call said to have been received from the Philadelphia police department, Hercules Dansey, the father of the boy, hurried to Palermo, a small village on the road to Cape May, to investigate a report that a boy answering the description of his child had been abandoned by autoists in that town on Sunday.

The autoists who left the child, the report said, answered the description of four foreigners seen in Hammonton by Miss Ruth Gardiner with a child answering the description of the Dansey child in that town on the day the boy disappeared.

Girl Scout Leader and Young Boy Scout Crossing Nation

Mrs. Bertha L. James, Girl Scout captain of Carney's Point, N. J., and her fifteen-year-old Boy Scout son, William, started on a transcontinental "hike" from New York today, each carrying a twenty-pound pack containing camp equipment and a change of clothing and shoes.

They expected to "make our expenses as we go," and obstacles in the path of their trip must bulk very large to stop them. They propose to camp out every night.

"My husband tried to dissuade us, but we are determined on our adventure," Mrs. James announced before starting.

Mrs. James and her son made an initial tramp of 125 miles from Carney's Point to their starting point at Girl Scout headquarters in New York.

Publicity Chairman Lays Blame on Slum Landlords as Contributions for Reform Lag

Charges that enemies of the movement are combating the attempt of the United Civic Campaign workers to raise $255,000 to carry on its work are made by John Crosby Brown, chairman of the publicity committee.

"These interests," said Mr. Brown, "have taken up the cause of the 'slum landlord' and argue that it is interference with legitimate investments to require the maintenance of sanitary conditions, to compel the repair of leaking roofs and the pumping out of flooded cellars. They fear the campaign, if it gets its money, will force these improvements."

Total contributions of $18,307 were announced up to Wednesday night. The four organizations whose campaign goal is $255,000 are the Philadelphia Housing Association, the Public Education and Child Labor Association, the Civic Service Reform Association and the Bureau of Municipal Research.

Samuel S. Fels, of the Bureau of Municipal Research, strongly deprecated the report that the co-operating organizations were out to dig up stories of graft.

"Nothing is further from the truth," Mr. Fels said. "They look to the future and aim to co-operate in every way with the next city administration."

"The campaign is endorsed by some of the most prominent men of the country," said George O. Taubman, campaign director. "William Howard Taft thought it so important that he left all his other work and came to this city to launch the drive."

FIVE GENERATIONS ATTEND BOWEN FAMILY REUNION

Oldest Member Is 95 and Deeply Interested in Current Events; Helps With the Dishes and Goes Shopping

FIVE generations of the Bowen family are celebrating today in the home of the oldest member, Mrs. John R. Bowen, 1215 South Fifty-second street.

There is really no special cause for celebrating, further than the fact that one of the three out-of-town members of the family is on a visit here. He is George W. Bowen, sixty-five years old, of Wellsboro, Pa. And he is the only male member of the family celebrating.

Mrs. John Bowen is ninety-five years old. Her granddaughter, Mrs. Josiah M. Shannon, is forty-seven years old and lives with her. Her great-granddaughter, Mrs. L. M. Ferris, is 25 years old, and lives at 4916 Kensington avenue. And then there is Miss Marion Ferris, her great-great-granddaughter, whose real age is four years but who said she was two.

Mrs. Bowen retains all her faculties and is deeply interested in current events. She is very active and explains that she "helps with the dishes and goes in town alone to do her shopping."

There is no doubt that her hearing is perfect. While she was explaining how young she was an airplane passed high in the air over her home. She heard it and ran to the front door to see its flight.

"I am greatly interested in airplanes but only as a spectator," she said. She was asked if she would not enjoy a trip in the air.

"No," she answered, "my ambitions are not so high as that."

Mrs. Bowen was born in Sheffield, Mass., in a log cabin on a farm. She and her husband moved to Wellsboro in 1853, where he opened a feed and grain store. When the Civil War started, Mr. Bowen was too old for active service, and both of their sons too young.

"We will always have wars," she said, "despite the league of nations or anything else. I am in favor of the league, however, if it will help in any way to keep peace."

Mrs. Bowen believes the discovery of the use of electricity the greatest of all.

There are three members of the Bowen family who are now visiting Mrs. Bowen. They are James M. Bowen, her other son, sixty-seven years old, of Wellsboro; Dr. Louis Schlemis, forty-two years old, another granddaughter, a dentist, of 1823 Wallace street, and John R. Bowen, forty years old, a grandson, who is in the automobile business in Washington, D. C.

DEMAND CONGRESS END SUGAR FAMINE

Thousands of Postcards and Letters Sent to Washington by Citizens Here

SHORTAGE LAID TO WEST

Philadelphia congressmen today received through the mails thousands of postcards and letters urging action by Congress to prevent the threatened sugar famine.

One type of postal, issued in printed form, informs the congressmen that they can regulate sugar prices as easily as postage costs. The postcard reads: "I protest against the threatened sugar famine."

"An unwarranted sugar famine starves the people of the United States in the face."

"Congress knows this, and knows that its immediate action can avert this famine. Such is the plain duty of Congress; for sugar is not a luxury, but an essential to the life of the nation. Next to air and water, sugar is the most needed element of nourishment; every baby and every child needs it; its scarcity and exorbitant price is a hardship on their vitality."

"Congress gave us reasonable postage and should give us reasonable sugar. Sugar can be regulated as easily as the postage."

The price of sugar is more important than the price of postage. I put the question of sugar and its price clearly up to you, my representative in Congress.

A blank space is left for the name and address of the petitioner. Such cards have been provided for distribution in all sections of the city. In each section the cards bear on the face the name and Washington address of the congressman from that particular district.

Western sugar hoarders are blamed for the shortage by local refiners. The Western refiners, the local men say, are unaffected by the wartime law against cane sugar hoarding.

The Western refiners work almost entirely in beet sugar, they said, and are holding out vast quantities of their product in hope of making a killing when the equalization board goes out of business.
