Is a man ever honest with himself? Was Dan Carson honest with himself when he jilted Julia Grant for another woman and then came sneaking back when the other woman refused to marry him?

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY LUCY determined to give her sister a real talking to, but when the time came she accomplished very little.

"I don't think you're treating Dan at all fair," Lucy flamed. "I'm sorry, dear."

"You mean you won't marry him?" "I don't know, I mean I won't marry him, but I want to finish my training at the hospital."

"That's all you think of these days," Lucy taunted. "Your hospital training! Why don't you ever think of other people?"

"Why, Lucy, why do you speak that way?" "Because I'm sorry for Dan. He's awfully unhappy."

"I was awfully unhappy, too, Lucy, not so long ago." "O, I know you were, dear; forgive me for nagging you. I did it because I want you and Dan to be happy."

Quick tears stood in Lucy's eyes; she looked like a green chili. The two girls kissed and Julia went back to the hospital, but both knew that nothing had been settled.

Julia had grown to love the smell of the hospital; it had a clean, antiseptic odor. She thought of the hospital as a great palace of healing and joy.

She shook her head. "Give me your hand." The tone was a command. He lifted the hand that hung at her side and took her pulse in silence.

He lifted the hand that hung at her side and took her pulse in silence. Julia could feel the hammering of her heart. It seemed as though he must hear it.

She shook her head. "Give me your hand." The tone was a command. He lifted the hand that hung at her side and took her pulse in silence.

It's so much easier to learn how to use a recipe when you see an expert use it first. You can have that opportunity all this week when the cooking pictures will be shown as follows:

CORN MUFFINS Thursday, Friday and Saturday—The Baltimore, Forty-ninth and Baltimore avenue.

ONE more Halloween suggestion, and then, perhaps, I won't make any more this year. Although, I do not give my promise. Anyhow, here's the suggestion.

I'm full of suggestions today! Here's another one, this time a suggestion for Christmas, and I might as well say right here and now, that as I come across Christmas ideas I am going to jot them down, and tell you about them. This is a suggestion for the friend who wears dark clothes, particularly, gothic blouses of black or dark blue.
