The concluding notes sustained by these trumpets after the orchestra and the full chorus had stopped were very good and produced a fine effect. -Mr. Thun-der conducted with great knowledge of the score and sympathy with it and fully deserved the ovations he received after several of the numbers.

The composition itself is not es-pecially inspired and many times it ap-proaches the danger line of secular com-position. Much of the narrative is written in monotone and does not com-pare favorably with the polyphonic style of the narrative in many older marks. There is commaratively little works. There is comparatively little melodic writing and where this style does preval it is secular rather than religious. However, Mr. Thunder made the work as religious as the composition will permit and the performance was fine throughout.
