The Testing of Julia Grant

Julia Tells the Man She Loves the Truth READ THIS FIRST

A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, and after Dan Carson discovered that Nancy Cromwell did not want him he went back to Julia Grant and asked her to take him back, even though he had jilted her. Julia, who had tried to bury her troubles in hospital work, felt that Dan needed her, and for the second time she promised to marry him. This time, nowever, she insisted upon finishing her hospital course, and all of Dan's persuasion could not shake her out of it. Then an unexpected complication, in the shape of Dr. John Norville, head surgeon, came into Julia's head surgeon, came into Julia's life. She discovered that she loved him, and that she had given her promise to another man and could not break it.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

JULIA sat on the bed and considered after Grace Merritt had left her. There was one thing certain, she could not go down to Doctor Norville's office. It was impossible to face him again, to face the possibility of the things he might say, perilously dear things, that might undermine what strength she had. If only she could get away from the hospital, away from him; if she could be alone where she could think. Flight seemed to be the only thing possible. She wanted to get away that night, and yet the brave thing to do would be to go down to Doctor Norville's office and face matters as they stood. To tell him quite frankly that she could not love him.

Julia thought she had suffered when Dan Carson had told her he loved some one else, but that suffering was nothing to what she was suffering now. She had loved Dan Carson with the dreams of her girlhood, she loved John Norville with the trust of her womanhood and there was a difference.

She sat and fought her battle there alone, and when it was all over she had decided what she must do. She would go down and tell Doctor Norville that she did not love him, then she would go to Miss Tully and make arrangements to leave the hospital. It was more than she could bear to face the days that stretched ahead of her in the hospital. Once rid of it, perhaps she could face life with a new courage. She would make Dan Carson happy if it killed her, and when she had thrown off her new independence he would be content at last. It was that independence of hers that had made him so restless and discontented.

Once having made up her mind, Julia went directly to the office from which she had fled precipitously only a short time ago. She knocked and he opened the door quickly, almost as if he had been walting for her to come.

She did not take the chair he held for her, and she did not look at him. Her fingers were tightly laced together and she spoke quickly.

"You wanted to see me?"

He threw back his head and laughed softly.

He threw back his head and laughed softly.

"Wanted to see you, yes, I think I did Julia—"

"Oh, please, you musn't" She turned a little away from him. "I came down to tell you something."

"Yes?" His voice was emotionless, almost kindly.

"I, I,—" She began miserably, and stopped.

He went over to her and took her hands in his. There was not a trace of the overmastering passion that had almost swept her off her feet before, in his manner. He was trying to help her.

"Listen to me, why, you're all unstrung," she was trembling violently.

Hamburg Steak and Tomatoes Send Man Tries to Stop Fight, With Boy to Hospital

A Sunday feast of Hamburg steak and tomatoes is blamed for the illness today of three persons in Camden, all suffering from ptomaine poisoning.

Bernard Gillespie, fourteen years old, of 200 Benson street, is at Cooper Hospital. When he was first taken there his condition was serious, but he is now out of danger.

His mother, Mrs. Isabella Gillespie, and Morris Richards, a boarder, are also ill. Serious Result Joseph Lapisanno, forty-six years old, 716 South Schell street, is just one more witness ready to testify that the peacemaker always gets the worst of an argument.

Lapisanno tried to stop a fight at Darien and Bainbridge streets last night. The participants turned their combined wrath on him and he was stabbed in the left side and cut up generally. He is in the Pennsylvania # of every scrap of meat and fat and bone. "It is because the housewife doesn't use suet that lard has risen from twelve and fourteen cents to thirty and thirty, five. If you eat out of a tin can, the cost of living is bound to go higher and higher." It is not necessary to go without meals in order to save money, according to Mrs. Wilson, but considerable more time must be spent by the house-keeper in seeing that she gets the full value of her money and in making use of all the food for which she has paid.
