POLITICS TRADE ITALY AT WAR

RECORD OF A YEAR SPENT IN ITALY

Dr. Joseph Collins Describes the Life of the People and How They Fought Austria

For trustworthy information about Italy and the people one should read "My Italian Year" by Dr. Joseph Collins, the outcome of an interesting experience there in Red Cross work during the last year of the war. It is not the record of the impressions of a newcomer, but of one who has been "since childhood a lover of Italy, an admirer of the Italian people and a frequent visitor to their country. In a series of letters which "have been pruned of the personal note," he describes the present condition of the people, especially the lower classes, and emphasizes their great need of education. The government is doing little to develop the great natural wealth of the land, and sanitary duties have been so neglected that "malaria is the national disgrace of Italy." His experiences with the army during the closing conflict with and complete victory over the Austrians impressed him with the fact that the peasant "has been the very bone and sinew of the Italian army," and upon him rests firmly and securely its glory. Especially interesting at the present time is his account of the "birth of Jugoslavina" and its close relations to Italy, but there is little reference to the Finme problem.

At times he leaves the great questions of the day confronting Italy and the world and describes the scenery about Rome and life in the capital, especially on summer Sundays. Telling of a motor flight in the Apennines, he impresses his readers with their beauty in diversity of scenery and attractiveness. He was present at a meeting of Parliament at the close of the war in which Premier Orlando made a speech reviewing the events of the last three and a half years. When he spoke of the United States he "described the telling effect of the American soldiers at Chateau-Thierry, pandemonium broke loose. Every deputy waved his handkerchief and shouted at the top of his voice. Every opponent of a seat in the gallery applauded or shrieked. There was a spontaneity and a whole-heartedness about the response that left no doubt in the heart of any man or woman present of how Italy feels toward America."

Fabre for Young People

Jean Henri Fabre has produced a book on farming, gardening and fruit raising for young people that will entertain and instruct many adults. He tells the story of wheat and why it is nutritious; he gives the history of tobacco and explains why soil is fertile and how its fertility can be increased. There are chapters on lime, manure and natural fertilizers in which the scientific facts are explained in simple untechnical language. He tells how to prune a fruit tree and why it should be pruned and how to make a tree bear fruit which has borne none. In fact, the book is a compendium of interesting and useful information for everyone at all occupied with growing things in the soil.

CALVIN COOLIDGE AND CHARLES M. PEPPER Whose names appear on the title page of new books very much worth while

CALVIN COOLIDGE CHARLES M. PEPPER WORTH WATCHING ON FOREIGN TRADE

A Collection of Speeches by Former Adviser of the State the Massachusetts Governor Department Has Written Reveals a Real Man a Timely Book

There is no man in America better informed on the subject of foreign trade than Charles M. Pepper, formerly foreign trade adviser of the Department of State. He has pursued his studies in all parts of the world and has accumulated a mass of first hand information. Now that America is anxious to extend its trade to other countries Mr. Pepper's new book, "American Foreign Trade," appears most opportunely. He has included in it a vast amount of information that will be invaluable to every exporter and to every business man who wishes to sell his goods abroad. The titles of some of the chapters indicate the range of the book. It opens with a discussion of "What foreign trade is." This is followed by a chapter on "The foreign market for American goods." Then the author discusses in succeeding chapters machinery and national efficiency, raw materials, the diplomacy of commerce, economic affairs and favored nations, British trade policy, American trade policy, the cargo carriers, the relations between continental Europe and the United States, Russia and the Near East, the economic condition of South America and its value as a market for Europe and for the United States. There are chapters on the economic condition of the Caribbean, on trade with Canada and with Japan and China. Another chapter deals with investments abroad and the book closes with a discussion of the American business man. The appendix contains the regulations and reciprocity provisions of the tariff laws from the McKinley law to the rejected provisions of the Underwood bill, and other important documents relating to foreign trade.

The discussion of opportunities for the United States in South America will be particularly interesting at this time when the power of Europe to compete with us there is waning. Mr. Pepper reminds his readers that the exports of the United States to the South American republics increased from $450,000,000 in the three years before the war to $730,000,000 during three years of the war ending with 1917, or an increase of 62 per cent. The exports from the United Kingdom in the same period decreased 48 per cent, and from France decreased 65 per cent, while Germany's exports disappeared altogether. For the same period the imports of the United States from the South American republics increased from $640,000,000 to $1,250,000,000, or 113 per cent. The imports of France increased only 24 per cent, and those of the United Kingdom increased but 16 per cent.

Now the American business man wants to know how he can retain the business which the war has thrown into his hands. It is Mr. Pepper's purpose to tell us there is a way. He explains the situation with a wealth of knowledge and a multiplicity of detail which make his book a mine of invaluable information. AMERICAN FOREIGN TRADE. The United States as a world market in a new era of international commerce. By Charles M. Pepper. New York: The Century Co. $2.50.

In the spring of 1916, long before the bituminous coal miners demanded a 60 per cent increase in wages and a five-hour day, he told the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce that "If material rewards be the only measure of success there is no hope of a peaceful solution of the social questions, for they will never be large enough to satisfy. But such is not the case, Men struggle for material success because that is the path, the process to the development of character and the attainment of the highest good, but most of all because it is justice." The addresses were made at Daniel Webster's home on July 4, in Roxbury on Banker Hill Day, before the alumni of Amherst College, at the Harvard commencement, at political meetings during his campaign for the governorship last year and at numerous other places. There is not a single speech in which he does not put some point of view, a striking fact indicating that he has done a lot of hard thinking on the fundamentals of a sound democracy. The book ought to be read by every person suffering from the spirit of unrest and by every man in public office. HAVE FAITH IN MASSACHUSETTS. A collection of speeches and messages. By Charles M. Pepper. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co.

Under the title of "Canada's Sons and Great Britain in the World War," Colonel George G. Nasmith, C. M. G., C. E. F., offers a study of the part played by Canada and the British empire in the world's greatest war. It takes on authority from the industry of General Sir Arthur Currie, who has been commander-in-chief of the Canadian Army Corps, and it is very profusely illustrated from official photographs furnished by the Canadian and British governments. There is also a chronological chart or table showing the progress of the war from day to day. Naturally the book is patriotically devoted to the stated objects in the title—the Canadian and British participation in the war, and so there is very little mention of American endeavor and heroism, either in the body of the work or the chronology. One might have expected to see more about the work of the many men from this side of the line who volunteered with the C. E. F., but the subject is a large one, and Colonel Nasmith has had to cover so much ground that very often he has had to part down deserved narratives of Canadian courage and heroism. His book has value for its tale of Canadian glory and also considerable value for its strategic presentation of the various campaigns. CANADA'S SONS AND GREAT BRITAIN IN THE WORLD WAR. By Colonel George G. Nasmith. Philadelphia: J. C. Winston Company. $3.50.

THE DICKENS CIRCLE Great Novelist's Relations to His Eminent Contemporaries

Dickensians have a fat volume of interesting interest in "The Dickens Circle." It is the work of J. W. T. Ely, long recognized on the other side of the water as one of the most authoritative writers on the life and writings, and the personality of the great novelist, literally a record of the great novelist's friendships. With the diligence in research which has characterized his previous efforts in the realm of Dickensiana, he has resulted in many notable findings and discoveries. Mr. Ely has gone thoroughly through the biographies, autobiographies, memoirs and occasional writings of all the eminent contemporaries of Dickens's period and from them extracted a mass of material of great reliability and equally important value as illustrating points in Dickens's life. He has not only studied and not an anthology of anecdotes, though there are, of course, many amusing stories of the novelist's temperament and those of his many friends. Mr. Ely has written the "Dickensia of Boz." Dickens admirers will relish this book highly. Among the great names concerned are Thackeray, Landor, Hood, Lockhart, Browning, Macready, Cruikshank, Carlyle, Irving, Longfellow, Lowell, Mrs. Gaskell, Hans Christian Andersen, and Miss Martineau, though this does not exhaust the list by half. The book is profusely illustrated, the frontispiece, being the somewhat dandified pencil sketch of the young Boz, made by Cruikshank in 1836. THE DICKENS CIRCLE. By J. W. T. Ely. New York: E. P. Whitlock's "Belgium"

Brand Whitlock's "Belgium," commonly known as "The Belgium Book," is one of the most popular books of the year. Perhaps the presence of such distinguished guests of our country as King Albert, his queen, and Cardinal Mercier, not to speak of Ambassador Whitlock himself, adds a special interest to a work in which they play the chief parts.

The Young Visitors by Daisy Ashford Aged 9 years

No book in recent years has made such a furore in the press of England and America. At a time when white paper is more precious than rubies and the greatest of our daily papers are refusing columns of advertising, scores of newspapers have been devoting space to the story of Daisy Ashford and her astonishing novel. Leading Editorials in papers like the New York "Tribune," the "Times," the "Sun," and what literally amounts to hundreds of columns of enthusiastic comment in the press every where attest the wonderful popularity of this book by a child of nine. THE YOUNG VISITERS has captured the hearts of two countries in the twinkling of an eye. For the time being we have a moderate stock of this book. The printing disturbance in New York may make it difficult for us to supply you later on. If you do not wish to be disappointed, it would be wise to place at once with your bookseller an order for as many copies as you are likely to need. There will be no increase in the moderate price of $1.00 for which the book is sold.

GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY, Publishers New York

A Few Words About Archibald Marshall The question "what makes a book sell?" is not always given the same answer, but it is generally accepted that the most effective force is "word-of-mouth advertising." Certain it is that the wide and ever-increasing popularity of Archibald Marshall may be traced to that form of publicity. Archibald Marshall is a realist of innate skill who writes in a leisurely and highly entertaining fashion of contemporary English life. His characters live and, as one critic has said, to know them is "to meet and to associate on terms of happy intimacy with delightful, well-bred, clear-minded men and women." Mr. Marshall's earlier books are read as widely as his later ones. This in itself is proof of the permanent value of his work. SIR HARRY, a new long novel from his pen, will be ready in November. The works of Archibald Marshall already published are: THE SQUIRE'S DAUGHTER ABINGTON ABBEY THE ELDEST SON THE GRAFTONS THE HONOUR OF THE CLINTONS THE GREATEST OF THESE THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH RICHARD BALDOCK THE CLINTONS, AND OTHERS WATERMEADS EXTON MANOR UPSIDONIA THE HOUSE OF MERRILEES The volumes are issued in uniform library binding at $1.75 each.
