REALLY the Orchestra ball at the Ritz was quite wonderful on Thurs-day night. Have you seen that little Mildred Stern dance? Why, she's ab-solutely remarkable. She's only about ten years old and just as light as a fairy. They threw the most wonderful lights on her as she flitted about the ballroom till you felt quite as if you ness fay.

As for the people there, the rooms were simply jammed; it was hardly possible to dance, but every one en-joyed it immensely, and I'll say it was a real success from start to finish. OH! GIRLS and bors, there's going to be another rummage sale! Aril I bought a hat at one for $3 the other day, and it's the best looking one I ever had. And, you see, it had belonged to one who was not tall and didn't lood right on her, so others said, and so it was sacrificed to the cause, in a way as it were. The concert of the Philadelphia Or-chestra yesterilay afternoon was marked by the first appearance of the new Philadelphia Orchestra chorus. An unmanife large audience was present at-tracted by that event and the fact that Mme. Samaroff was the soloist. The program opened with the power-ful "Romeo and Juliet" overtureful 'Romeo and Juliet' overture-fantasy of Tschaikowsky. With his natural inclination toward the some and tragic, the great Russian composer found in this medieval Itaiaa tragedy a theme which appealed strongly to him, and the composition is worked out with great skill and his customary richness of orchestration. Mr. Stokowski, in his reading, followed closely and sympa-thetically the obvious intent of the comer, and gave an effective interpre-

Mme. Samaroff then played the Liszt concerts in A major. The work makes a freer use of several of the orchestral a freer use of several of the orchestral instruments as purely solo instruments, using them molodically, with the place having beilliant figurations against the main themes, than do most plano con-certas. The effect is delightful and altogether justified, as the work is in one movement and so free in form as to be almost a fantasia. Mine, Samaroff has never played hers better than she did yesterday, her thick being deliente, even and firm, producing a beautiful tone. Much of the plano part is acabesque in style, requiring grent fluency and deliency of execution, and this was splendidly done, while at the same time there was no lack of power in the more vigorous passages.

Mozart is always hard to play, because of his charity, and hard to inter-pret because of a seening simplicity which covers an amazing complexity of composition. Mr. Stokowski took the whole symphons, but especially the opening allegro and the andante, at a somewhat quicker tempo than hereto-fore, with a decided gain in effect. The chorus made its appearance in the closing number, the Choral Fantasy of Bechoven. for plano solo, orches-tra and chorus. Mme. Samaroff playing the plano. The work is undoubtedly the forerunner of the Ninth Symphony.
