The Testing of Julia Grant By HAZEL DEXO BATCHELOR Copyright, 1919, by the Public Ledger Company

Lucy Plays Eavesdropper

READ THIS FIRST Julia Grant has promised a second time to marry Dan Carson, even though he jilted her temporarily for another woman. At the time this happened, Julia went into a hospital to study nursing, and there met another type of man, Dr. John Norville, the head surgeon. It wasn't until after she had given her promise to Dan Carson that she realized her feelings toward the doctor, and then it was too late. Her wedding day is approaching when suddenly Doctor Norville appears on the scene.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY SOMETHING that Julia and Doctor Norville were entirely unconscious of was the fact that some one else had seen Julia come into the room, had seen the two meet and had heard everything that was said. That evening right after dinner Lucy had gone down to see Inez Holt for a few minutes. Inez Holt happened to be Lucy's most cherished friend and confidante, she was the one person who knew exactly how Lucy felt toward her sister's lover, for Lucy confided everything to her and the two girls anguished together over what Inez termed "the saddest and most romantic situation" she had ever known. Lucy had not received the sympathy from her mother that she had expected, but what Mrs. Grant refused Inez supplied lavishly, and it comforted Lucy somewhat to tell in detail what had happened or what she had imagined had happened between herself and her future brother-in-law.

"Sometimes he looks at me in the the two meet and had heard everything

"Sometimes he looks at me in the most solemn way." She had told Inez that night. "Just as though he were miserable about something. You know how cold Julia is, Inez, she simply never unbends. I don't believe she cares much for him."

for him."

In the mind of Inez, Julia was a character of romance, and Inez secretly admired the older girl extravagantly. Julia was like a princess, Inez could much more readily imagine a man being wildly in love with her than she could with Lucy. But then of course, Lucy was her own particular friend, and she had to be loyal, and so she responded as aympathetically as she could and waited eagerly for Lucy to tell her more.

"I don't believe Dan really cares for

"I don't believe Dan really cares for Julia so very much, do you?" Lucy went on. "With all I have told you I think you can imagine how things are. Of course Julia is my own sister and there is nothing at all I can do, and still be fair to her. And of course there is nothing Dan can do. He wouldn't dare do anything to Julia a second time even if he wanted to."

And Inez agreed that such a thing would be simply impossible. Inez was not very responsive that evening and Lucy went early with the consciousness that she had not impressed Inez over much. She returned to the house and let herself into the basement by a clever turn of the wrist and the hand slipped through the iron grill of the door. Only the very slimmest hand could undo the catch in just that way, in fact, Lucy was the only one in the house who could manage it successfully.

The basement was dark and Mary manage it successfully.

The basement was dark and Mary had gone upstairs, Lucy was about to run lightly up the first flight of stairs that led to the parlor floor when she heard voices and she stopped to listen. She expected to hear Julia and Dan, but much to her surprise it was not Dan Carson's voice that she heard. This man had a much deeper voice, and Lucy, without a moment's hesitation, crept softly upstairs to listen. It was thus that she heard the entire conversation and she was hidden on the stairs when the bell pealed suddenly and startled Julia and Doctor Norville apart. Lucy's heart was beating furiously; she could hardly think, thoughts were darting so quickly through her brain. No wonder Julia had been acting so coidly of late toward Dan. It was because she had fallen in love with some one else, why did she want Lucy clenched her bands in fury. She Lucy clenched her bands in fury. Sue felt that something dramatic was going on behind that closed door, and here was she shut out, unable to hear a thing. It was the more maddening because she felt that she ought to hear. It concerned her vitally, for she was one of the principal figures in this tangle whether the others realized it or not.

The sharp edge on the wind has set many women coat hunting in carnest. Wise women, with an eye to economy, are coming to the Down Stairs Store and finding it a mine of good value.

Between $25 and $35

there are several hundred good coats in a host of different styles. They start with a polo coat at $25, which is sketched. It is in reindeer, navy and brown and is a good knockabout coat for rough wear.

Other coats of velour, silvertone, kersey and mixed conting are to be had in this price range. Some are half lined, some lined throughout and several coats have collars of sealene fur. All the good Winter colorings are in the group.

Between $35 and $50

comes the largest assortment. Here are soft pompoms, silvertones, broadcloths and velours in reindeer, taupe, navy, brown, dark green, Pekin and black. Virtually every coat is lined throughout with silk and many have collars of sealene

The other coat that is sketched is of pompom, in black, with a fur collar of sealene, $45.

The Finer Coats of soft, luxurious materials are handsomely trimmed with fur and beautifully lined. Penchbloom, Bolivia, evora, chame-leon cord and tinseltone are in colorings as soft and lovely as the materials themselves. $50 to $110.

Batiste Blouses With High Necks Seven Models—$2.75 to $5.75

Fine, white batiste is well made into tailored blouses with high necks, neat and plain or of the more elaborate persuasion, trimmed with insertion or lace. But almost every model displays tucking, the fine pin-tuck variety or the wider tucks.
