Randolph Street Bakery Employe Gives His Life Guarding $1100 on Last Night on Job

CASH UNDER LIFELESS BODY

A lone automobile bandit shot and instantly killed a fifty-eight-year-old bakery manager last night when the man put up a fight to save $1100 of his employer's money which he was counting.

The shot was fired after the manager had recovered from the stunning effects of a crack on the head and was getting the better of the intruder. The assailant escaped, but the loot for which he had fought was found under the dead manager, the bills stained with the blood he had given to defend

The attack occurred in the store of the Saeta Bakery Co., 1117 South Randolph street.

Morris Raiser, the manager and bookkeeper, who was killed, was round-ing out the last day of his employment at the shop, having determined to quit and take another position offered him. Raiser lived at 1820 South Sixth street. He had a wife and five children.

Bandit Has Partner

Twelve men were working in the bakery when the attack and attempted robbery occurred, but Rafiser was the only person in the front store and office section. Several persons saw the big wine-colored limousine drives up and stop a short distance away from the bakery. One man got out and en-tered the shop, while another stays was at the driver's post. The engine was at the driver's post. The engine was shortly after the bandit entered the Bortly after the bandit entersa the bakery loud screams were heard. Charles Solick, 2058 Orkney street, and Max Math. 2457 North Newkirk street, employes, burst into the rear of the office in time to see Raiser, blood streaming from a wound in his fore-head, struggling across the floor with the intruler and then fall dend as the bandit placed his revolver to the man-ager's heart and shot. Pausing but a moment to see that Raiser was past helping, the two men ran after the fleeing bandit, calling for help as they ran. Solick and Math were hardly twenty feet away from the big limousine when the bandit dived into the rear seat and the driver started rapidly away. There was no license tag on the rear. The two employes pursued the auto for half a block, but it turned into for half a block, but it turned into for half a block, but it turned into distanced. No other machine was at hand in which to give chase, and the bandit and his pal made a clean getaway. Math says the slayer was about five feet eight inches tall, weighed about 150 pounds and was smooth shaven. of automobile the bandits used. The bakery is situated in an isolated part of Randolph street, there being few houses in the neighborhood. Poltee believe the bandit and his com-panion were thoroughly familiar with the workings of the Saeta firm. The at tack was planned at a time when it would net the maximum of cash, if sue-cessful. All the wagons of the firm were in at the time, and the drivers had turned over the day's receipts to Raiser.

Man Instantly Killed

Examination of the dead man showed that the wound on his head had been caused by being struck by some blunt weapon, probably the butt end of the revolver. The bullet had killed him in-stantly, said physicians at the Mount
