

COUNCILMEN-ELECT DISCUSS NEW PLANS

Weglein, Candidate for President, Suggests Fewer Committees

FELTON PROBABLY CLERK

Councilmen-elect, who will be members of the city's new legislative body, are already discussing plans for the organization and management of councilmanic business under the provisions of the new city charter.

The present City Council has a staff of about forty clerks. It is suggested that this staff be considerably reduced inasmuch as it serves two bodies.

Mr. Weglein said he was likely that William H. Felton, chief clerk of the present Common Council, would be chosen as chief clerk of the new Council.

Richard Weglein, one of the candidates for president of the new Council, said that members should have desks room in City Hall, where they could meet their constituents each day.

Mr. Weglein said meetings of the Council should be held once every week. The present City Council, unless called in special session, meet only twice a month, on the first and third Thursdays.

Members of the new body are considering plans for the reduction and consolidation of the present twenty-eight standing committees. As for the most important finance committee it was suggested that the Council, sitting in committee of the whole, should constitute the finance committee.

Mr. Moore discussed also some of his plans as Philadelphia's next Mayor. "The time for talking gives way to the requirements of the reorganization that must be effected," he said.

MOORE TAKES FLING AT GORMAN 'FLUKE'

Mayor-Elect Pleaded That "Legitimate" Minority Commissioner Won

DISCUSSES FUTURE PLANS

Mayor-elect Moore took a fling this afternoon at the unsuccessful attempt of the Charter party to "steal" the minority member of the board of county commissioners.

He was asked what he thought of the election of Edgar W. Lank, Democrat, as the minority commissioner.

He expressed pleasure over the compliance with the spirit of the law in electing a "legitimate" minority commissioner over the candidate of a party "tricked up for selfish interests."

"The law contemplates the election of a minority party man county commissioner," said Mr. Moore. "This means of course, a legitimate minority party and not one tricked up for selfish interests."

Mr. Moore discussed also some of his plans as Philadelphia's next Mayor. "The time for talking gives way to the requirements of the reorganization that must be effected," he said.

"The new Mayor, of course, will not go into office until the first week of January next," he said.

HERE'S A MAN SO HANDSOME FLAPPERS GASP "IS HE REAL?"

Women Sigh in Admiration and Mere Men Are Frankly Envious of Stylishly Groomed Adonis With Face That Excels Collar "Ad" Models

He was such a handsome young man that the Market street flappers stood thrilled in their tracks.

His lips met in an irresistible curve. His jaw was as square as those worn by the heroes of the collar ads.

And such wonderful clothes! An overcoat of surpassing elegance, with a deep collar of fur.

So there he stood, in all his immaturity the glory in the bright hood of light in the show window at a Market street store.

"I ain't so sure, maybe he's real," the man conceded.

In the midst of telegrams, telephone calls, personal letters and gifts from friends that came thick and fast today, Isaac H. Clothier, one of Philadelphia's pioneer merchants and financiers, celebrated his eighty-second birthday anniversary by rejecting over-election returns.

Mr. Clothier retired from active business twenty-four years ago, but has retained his personal interest in business and in public affairs.

Birthdays Always Distinctive "Birthdays have always been distinctive days in my life," he said.

Mr. Clothier has always had a keen interest in the welfare of his city. He has been identified with Swarthmore College and other institutions for many years.

Several days ago, speaking on this subject, Mayor Smith said he could do everything he could to see that the next administration was not hampered by reason of lack of funds.
