Nancy Wynne Talks of Those Who Attended Princeton Game on Saturday—Tea Next Saturday for Newcomers to the City-Many Social Doings

WASN'T Saturday a wonderful day for the Princeton-Harvard game? And didn't a huge crowd go up to it? I always love Princeton on one of the game days. In fact at any time the town is practically led by the college men, but on big game days there's no holding them.

Several of the debutantes went up to the game, among them Elizabeth Bartow, who by the way is to have a party given for her at the Lilaes this week by the Heatley Dulleses. Her parents will not entertain for her till after the new year, as they are in mourning fer Mrs. Allen, who was Mrs. Bartow's mother.

Mary Page went up to the game, Mary Page went up to the game, too. She is an awfully sweet little gosephine G. Hooper, on Thursday, girl, I think. Full of fun and very good looking, with extremely fair hair. She and Evelyn, her older sister, are coming out together this month, you know. They are the daughters of the Howard Wurts Pages, and will be presented on November 20.

Margaret Dallett, another very attractive deb, also went to the game, and so did Nancy Cope, Margaret Earle. Fanny Wister and Betty Strubing.

NO TEA today, for which let us be No TEA today, for which let us be duly and truly thankful; in fact, thankful altogether. Why do we keep going to the things eyery day, when we meet the same people and say the same things and smile the same smiles. I wonder? Just because we do, and because we like to see the same people and laugh over the same pokes and smile, those same smiles day in and day out, and also just because "everybody's doing it." And that's true, you know. However, it's been the custom in "sassiety" for many a year, and I see nothing to change it, though some of the girls are heing introduced in other ways this senson. The rest of the week will have enough-teas to suit any who may be pining for them, so all will be well!

I HEAR that Mr. and Mrs. Robert

The movelty of the program was the movement, and the Beethoven in its involved ensemble. In both compositio changes form in both the slow more-ment singular and the scherzo, and re-turn in their original form in the coda of the finale. The movement is rich melocially and harmonical. The scherzo, which is based on a serenade for violin and piano by Mr. Kreisier, is perhaps the most attractive movement of the four, being full of whimsical fancy, and was well played by Mr. Letz and the others. The slow movement seems to lack depth and is the weakest movement in the work.

to lack depth and is the weakest movement in the work.

Mr. Kreisler's Quartet, as a whole, is pleasing, without being especially profound. There is some tendency toward virtuosity, perhaps only natural in a violinist of Kreisler's ability, and it makes considerable technical demands on the performers without, however, being too difficult technically to justify the artistic result. The quartet was a completed by Mr. Kreisler in March of the present year.
