Defiant Pirtsburgh students, with their ladies at their sides, under a canopy of waving pennants, sang their canopy of waving pennants, sang their songs and shouted their war-crys and clapped with their hands the famous Pitt "hand-yell." until the western big brass band, with its blue and orange aniforms, blared martially into the field. Then they rose with a roar, Along with the students were the mammas and papas and friends in their blankets and furs.—28,000 of them, more

Overhead, puffy white clouds salled along against the cobalt background of the sky, and the sun burst through over the heads of the rooters and on the chalked green of the field like a tremendous benediction.

endous benediction. The gala chatter of the thousands of spectators swelled into an iron roar when the two elevens trotted out from the dressing rooms.

Outside the field, hundreds turned away. But many ling about, finding some pleasure in swinging din from inside the brick walls, finding symething of the carni-val atmosphere in the cries of the news-ies, and the hot chestmut ver lors, and the Red and Blue, Blue and Orange
