Elizabeth Brockie and Mes. Warden went over yesterday morning and stopped at the Ritz, going from there to the recoption in the evening. The Glendinuings went over in the afternoon and were at the Waldorf, and Mr. Warden and Celestine were at the Pennsylvania over night. Aren't you just dying to see them all when they come home, and hear about it?

They must have looked their best, too. Mary and Ellen wore blue brocaded silk frocks and were like two little fairies, they are so dainty, don't you think? and Celestine's gown was of wine color brocade and it had a ting wreath of French blue flowers on the shoulder. You know how becoming that must have been.

were twe quote him) "trying to slip one over."

Little is known in this country of Malipiero or for that matter of any of his contemporaries in the new Hailan school, which declares itself to have broken completely away from the Italian course, not only of Verdi, but also from the inter-style of Puccini, and as the composition of last Friday and Saturday showed, is struggling along in the thorny paths of modern absolute music. However, Mr. Stokowski was not trying to "slip one over" as our correspondent suggests. Malipiero does actually exist and the same work which Mr. Stokowski performed last week was first given in 1918 in Minn under the latton of Toscanini, who, it is said, is in full sympathy with the modern tendencies of his compatriote. It was also performed in Boston last accessin by Mr. Rabund and we are told produced "a ground impression." although what the component elements of that impression were is not set forth.
