

The Testing of Julia Grant

By HAZEL DEYO BATCHELOR

READ THIS FIRST

After promising Dan Carson a second time to marry him, Julia Grant discovers that she had made a terrible mistake. Nevertheless she sticks to her bargain because she has promised and she feels that it is her duty. Even after she knows that all her heart is given to another man, Dr. John Norville, and after her younger sister, Lucy, confesses her love for Dan, Julia perseveres although she gives Dan every chance to release her. A bad fall resulting in a long illness for Lucy, postpones Julia's wedding a second time.

WHEN GO ON WITH THE STORY

WHEN Julia brought up her tray for dinner there was still an air of suppressed excitement about Lucy. Mrs. Grant sitting at a moment on the edge of the bed before going down to dinner, remarked in her somewhat facetious way:

"That will must have done you good, Lucy. You look very bright."

"Oh, it did," Lucy rejoined, biting off a piece of celery daintily. "Julia doesn't like Starr, though; do you Julia?"

"Don't trust her," Julia said bluntly.

Mrs. Grant shrugged her shoulders, and the subject was dropped.

After dinner Julia went out to the drug store for any necessary things, and when she returned she was met in the hall by her mother.

"Dan's upstairs with Lucy," Mrs. Grant said, quickly.

Julia looked surprised. Dan had fallen into the habit of going up to Lucy's room every evening for a short talk. She wondered why her mother was emphasizing what had come to be an understood thing. Then she realized suddenly that her mother was trying to keep her from going up to Lucy. Evidently she did not want Lucy and Dan to be interrupted.

"Come in and talk to your father and me a minute," Mrs. Grant urged Julia. "We never see you. Dan will be down in a minute."

Upstairs Lucy had called Dan in her room. She was sitting up in a deep chaise longue with several pillows banked behind her. It was the first time she had been up and she looked unusually pretty in a soft rose-colored dressing gown. Dan had been reading to her when suddenly he looked up to find her wide blue eyes fixed on him determinedly.

He laughed. "What are you thinking of?"

"Dan, I want to ask you a question," she said after a moment.

"Fire away."

"Do you still love Julia?"

The magazine dropped to the floor, but Dan looked up and met Lucy's eyes full. "I'm afraid I do."

He said it with perfect assurance. To Lucy who loved him it must have sounded like a death knell, but her face did not change in its expression, as she said, "She doesn't love you."

"She will."

"She never will; she wouldn't in any case. I know Julia. So do you, Dan, only you're determined to be blind. You know you can make her happy, you Lucy, you're not good enough for her. Dan, have you told her about Nancy Cromwell?"

"What about her?"

"You know. Are you going to tell Julia?"

"No, I'm not. What good would it do?"

"I think you'd better tell Julia," Lucy's voice was very quiet and even. "Because if you don't," she added after a minute, "I will."

Dan was furiously angry then. He forgot that Lucy was ill, he stormed at her as she lay there against her cushions. "He was angry at her interference and angrier still at his impotence to do anything. Some thing in Lucy's manner convinced him that she meant what she said. She had evidently taken up the cudgels for her sister and was waging her battles. If Dan had only known the real reason why Lucy was cornering him this way, if he had known that Lucy was pretending a feeling for Julia because it suited her own plans and for no other reason."

"What good would it do?" he asked again and again. "And I know I'm ashamed of it, but it did wake me up. I didn't realize until that happened just how much I really cared for Julia."

"That doesn't alter the fact that you threw Julia over because you wanted this Nancy Cromwell," Lucy persisted in her clear, small voice. "And if Nancy Cromwell had taken you that time you would never have come back to Julia. That's true, too, isn't it? You see, Julia thinks you love her, and she marries you because she feels it's her duty. You're conceited enough to believe that you can make her love you after you have married her, but that's a mistake. You'll just be miserable together. The thing for you to do is to give up Julia."

SIMPLE COSTUME OF STYLISH LINES

The simplicity of this frock is its chief charm, and lends itself admirably to dressing up in the shape of trimming or drapery. Tomorrow Miss Rose will give some suggestions for changing it.

A Daily Fashion Talk by Florence Rose

THE high cost of dressing—or the H. C. D.—is a particular phase of the H. C. D., that seems to be getting more attention from the women these days than it really deserves. You need more money to buy clothes than you did two or five years ago, or even one year ago. But then money has never been and never will be the coin by which we buy style. It's a matter of individual knack, imagination, initiative and personality. Some women look stylish and smart in her life. She hasn't made the right sort of effort.

So if your money won't go as far as it used to go, just make up your mind to use your ingenuity. Just make up your mind to achieve style in the clothes you do have. One very false impression that women are apt to get is that one cannot be in style this year without wearing expensive fur trimmings, metallic braides, hand embroideries, beadwork and all the other embellishments that surely do cost money. But style is always a matter of line—not of trimming. Especially is this so this year.

I have gone to a good deal of pains—pleasant pains, of course—in getting the little sketch you see today. It shows the essentials—nothing more—of the get-up that is supremely smart just now. It is surprising how often smart women's minds run in the same channel. Give them a shop full of hats and, just at present, the smart woman will select the very model that the artist has shown today. Milliners launched many models. Smart women have simultaneously awarded the laurels to the one shown here. So with frocks; and can you imagine anything simpler than this one, attractive in navy blue tulle or serge or black satin? You could make it yourself if you are clever, and I really believe that you could cut it from a pattern of a bungalow apron. That is about what it amounts to. The skirt is fairly short, which is necessary in a simple frock of this sort. Your dressmaker could make it. And if you buy it ready-made, don't worry about selecting one that is untrimmable. It is the line you want and the trimming you may add yourself later. Tomorrow I am going to show you how this simple little bungalow apron frock can be modified. And the shoes—for shoes always play an important part—they, too, are the sort that smart women are selecting—high heels with cross straps over the instep, a medium vamp and only a slightly pointed toe—the bows, if you wish. Their tendency is, of course, to make the feet appear smaller.

RED CROSS SHOWS STRANGE VIEWS OF EX-SERVICE MEN

Condition of Disability Brings Paradoxical Reports, but All Soon Get Straightened Out on Life's Path

The disabled service man views his disability in all kinds of ways. Any Red Cross home service worker will testify to that.

"I got my 100 per cent disability today and I am feeling fine," was the paradoxical statement that startled Mrs. Clarence W. Dougherty today while she was in charge of the Red Cross Information Desk at 1007 Walnut street. The soldier in question felt that his disability had not been rated sufficiently high by the government officials and when he received the news of the increased rate he was overjoyed.

Another day an ex-gob came in and snarled, "Everything's all right, my back pay came." But by the time he left he admitted that he had had hernia, appendicitis and heart trouble while he was in service—indeed that everything had been not "all right" but "all wrong"; so medical care and government compensation were in order.

There was another, wounded in the head and both ankles broken. The Red Cross helped him to get his braces and his vocational training and compensation. He was deeply grateful. "It's a fine spirit that they have, these

WANAMAKER'S DOWN STAIRS STORE WANAMAKER'S

Wanamaker's Down Stairs Store

A Plain, Straight-Forward Announcement That Concerns Good Music, Thanksgiving, Christmas and You — The Down Stairs Store Presents the

LITTLE PHONOGRAPH SHOP $5 down and $5 a month And the Solotone Phonograph $5 a month

A new Wanamaker service will have its beginning tomorrow morning in the Down Stairs Store, in the opening of a moderate-price phonograph shop. Several rooms of the Little House of Home Ideas have been given over to it and here you will find the Solotone, as well as the less expensive grades of other standard makes. And all this right at the beginning of the holiday season, when people turn to music and all it stands for!

The Solotone
is the name of the instrument featured in the Little Phonograph Shop. It is the product of the Solotone Manufacturing Company, a reliable Philadelphia concern. We chose this instrument because, after a careful investigation of the field, we find that it represents a maximum of value and is thoroughly reliable and dependable. Among its good features:

- it will play all disc records perfectly and there are no parts to change;
- the sound chamber is made of wood, without metal, and surface noises are reduced to an absolute minimum. This is a most important point, as it means the elimination of unpleasant rasping sounds;
- the motor is a good motor, accurately made, durable and virtually noiseless;
- the cabinet work is excellent, producing a most slightly instrument of Adam design, which can be had in fumed oak or mahogany finishes;
- in size the Solotone stands 45 inches high, is 20 1/2 inches wide and 21 1/2 inches deep and has ample space for storing records.

This is the $100 Solotone

We Have Tested the Solotone and it has passed every test. Its tone is clear and fine and there is a pleasant absence of mechanical noises of any kind. Here in the Little Phonograph Shop we will make the same tests for you, for after all the only way to judge the tone is actually to hear it yourself.

These terms apply to all the phonographs in the Down Stairs Store—
Victor Victrola Outfits, up to $100
Pathe Phonographs at $100
Columbia Grafonolas at $100
A Complete Assortment of "Emerson Hits" will be kept on hand, records which bring out the new popular songs and dance music while they are newest.

The Solotone Is Ready for Immediate Delivery
—a point worth bearing in mind these before-holiday times. If you know any of the difficulties in deliveries that have harassed the phonograph world, you know how important this is.

The Price Is $100
and it can be paid at once or on convenient terms of payment—
$5 Down and $5 a Month
The Little Phonograph Shop is in the Central Section on the East Aisle.

There's a Jolly Future Ahead of Sports Coats

Fashion authorities tell us that sports coats of mannish cut will be more fashionable than ever as the season progresses. Already, a great many young women are wearing them with plaid skirts.

Scores of new sports coats have arrived during the past fortnight. They are of camel's hair, silver-tone, polo cloth, chevot, tweed, leatherette and many mannish coatings in all the heather shades of brown, blue, tan or oxford gray. Many are quite plain and severely tailored, others have ahawl collars or cape collars of beaver, racoon, skunk opossum and ringtail furs.

Prices start at $15 for the leatherette coats and go to $97.50 for the fine camel's-hair coats trimmed with beaver.

The model that is sketched is a new double-breasted coat of camel's hair, lined throughout with silk of the same tawny tan. Notice the attractive buckles on the cuffs and on the belt.
