How to Prepare the Menu, Place the oysters in the icebox, near the ice, until ready to serve, Scrape the celery, cutting the root into a point, then splitting it in half from root end to tip, Place in cold water and trim, then clean the radishes, Slice the radishes into four parts from tip to near the stem end; use a sharp knife for this purpose—this makes eight cuts in the radishes, Place in cold water, Wash the oyster shells and set aside until needed for serving the oysters, Planked Squab, Split the squab down the back, then draw, Wash well in cold water and remove the breast, Place in a baking pan, rub with shortening and dust very lightly with the flour, Place in a hot oven to bake for thirty-five minutes, Baste frequently with hot water, Now lift to a hot platter and cover with a strip of bacon, Split the sweet potatoes and place on each corner, Brush lightly with butter, dust with cinnamon and brown sugar, Place in a hot oven for twelve minutes, Marketing for Menu No. 2, Select, Eight large oysters on deep shells, Two ounces of bacon, One stalk of well-bleached celery, One-half pound of flounder, One broiling guinea hen, One piece of cranberry jelly, One small head of cauliflower, One small head of cabbage, One green pepper, One small can of pumpkin, Raisins and nuts, Grilled Oysters, Carefully look over the oyster and remove all bits of shell, Wash and then roll in maximum dip, bread crumbs, Return to the deep shell and broil or bake in a hot oven for ten minutes, Guinea Hen Marie, Have the butcher split the hen down

The Question Corner, Today's Inquiries, 1. What is the birthday superstition for Wednesday? 2. Describe a useful silk and velvet brush that can be made by hand. 3. Is it correct to send a wedding gift when only announcements of the wedding have been received? 4. From what sources can olive green dye be made at home? 5. What attractive substitute for broken lids of round vegetable dishes can be bought for a small sum? 6. Describe a pretty centerpiece for the Thanksgiving table, Yesterday's Answers, 1. An unusual crocheted gift to make for Christmas is a square silet edge stiffened with glue, to be used as a picture frame, 2. Put a spoonful of vinegar in the washing water to remove the odor from pans in which onions have been cooked, 3. The proper time to leave after a formal dinner at a private house is 9:30 or 10 o'clock, 4. George Elliot was a celebrated English novelist, whose most famous book is "Silas Marner," Her real name was Marian Evans, 5. In putting silver away in flannel bags, a few pieces of gum camphor placed in the bags will postpone the tarnish, 6. A pretty and economical crown for the sport hat is a patchwork affair of varicolored disk, edged with blanket stitching

Ask Mrs. Wilson, If you have any cooking problems, bring them to Mrs. Wilson. She will be glad to answer you through these columns. No personal replies, however, can be given. Address questions to Mrs. M. A. Wilson, Evening Public Ledger, Philadelphia.

the back and remove the breastbone, Wash and wipe dry, then rub well with shortening and dust with flour, Lay in a baking pan and place in a hot oven, Broil the turkey ten minutes with boiling water, Cook for forty minutes in a moderate oven and just ten minutes before removing from the oven cover the hen with strips of bacon and

Adventures With a Purse

HOW do you sprinkle your clothes? The chances are ten to one that you put some water in a bowl and then sprinkle it in "gobs." The advantage of sprinkling the clothes evenly need not be discussed. It is more to the point to discuss a means for bringing this about. And here is where I step in modestly and offer a suggestion. I saw some rubber tops which can be slipped over the mouth of any reasonably sized bottle. This top is perforated, and thus the water comes out evenly. You can get one of these tops for fifteen cents.

The woman who is subject to fainting spells or car-sickness appreciates the necessity for carrying smelling salts with her wherever she goes. But she also does not overlook the inconvenience of carrying a bottle of liquid salts, which may, and quite probably do, leak all over her handbag. For this reason she will be glad to know of an ingenious little device for carrying salts. Here she will find capsules, about half an inch in length, filled with aromatic ammonia salts, and covered with a kind of white crocheted silk wrapping. Crushing the capsules between the fingers allows the reviving fumes of the salts to escape, while the silk covering holds the powder secure and prevents its spilling or over-spilling. Isn't that a good idea? The price of a box is seventy-eight cents.

Mending Sheets, If the sheet on the double bed has a discouraging tear straight down the middle, don't feel that it is only good for the ironing board. Tear it all the way down, hem up that one side and keep it for an extra single sheet. The small piece will do for the ironing board, or for a cloth over which to press a serge skirt.

Weaving Ribbon, Weaving narrow ribbons together like the strands of a basket makes a very pretty result. When this kind of work is made into a handkerchief case, pin-cushion cover, or pocket puff bag, you have as dainty a Christmas gift as anybody would want.

For Rusty Iron, A little oil combined with pumice powder will take the rust off and will not leave an uneven scratched surface. The pumice alone cuts into the iron and leaves it rough.

This is what cleared my skin, If your complexion is red, rough—if it is excessively oily or unnaturally dry—try Resinol Soap. It will help to heal your sick skin, and to enable you to have that clear, healthy complexion nature intended you to have. When the skin is in very bad condition, a little Resinol Ointment, applied after bathing with Resinol Soap will usually bring more beneficial and quicker results. The Woman's Exchange

Wants to Be a Nurse, Dear Madam—I am a daily reader of your column and find it very interesting. I have now come to you for advice. I am fifteen years of age, and am in the first year of high school. My ambition is to be a nurse. As I know that I am too young for training, I would appreciate it highly if you would please mention a few places where I can begin at this age. It may be a school.

A DAILY READER, None of the hospitals take girls as young as you for training, and there is nowhere else that you could get your certificate for nursing. The only thing you can do is go ahead with your school work for a few more years. You might take a night course in home nursing at one of the technical schools. That will at least get you into line for the hospital training, and will occupy your time so that you will not get so impatient waiting to be eighteen.

Information About Pork, Dear Madam—I would like you to send me some answers. First—Please give me the story of how pork was first cooked. I think it has to do with the Japanese, but am not sure. I would surely appreciate it if you could give me any knowledge of silk stockings who actually know. They are used on the Department at Washington for catalogues for that particular grain or fruit. Now, isn't there any place I can send for information like that for pork?

If you go to the reference room of the Public Library, Thirteenth and Locust streets, you will be able to find some books that will give you this information. Ask the librarian to help you. Write to the Department of Agriculture for this information, also.

School for Deaf Persons, Dear Madam—I am reading the EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER a short time ago I noticed an article about a school for people that are hard of hearing. Will you kindly advise me as to where the school is located and also the fees to attend same?

MRS. W. V. Z., There is a school of lip reading for adults at the Speech Reading Club, 1210 Locust St. The tuition is $50, and this includes thirty mornings. Most of the students take three lessons a week and two afternoon practices. The Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb in Mt. Airy also gives these lessons, but they are primarily for children.

Some Easily Made Gifts, Dear Madam—If your column will you please describe a few simple gifts for Christmas that could be easily made? I think your column is very interesting and useful to many people.

A CHRISTMAS GIFTMAKER, Have you noticed the various suggestions that have appeared in the "Woman's Page" lately? There was the play apron for a child, the collar and cuff set of hemstitched organdy, the picture frame of flannel, the telephone screen of cardboard, the holder for hot plates, made out of a scratched record, and the workbasket made of berry baskets fastened together and covered with silk.

The Newest Stockings

Woolen stockings are as popular as silk for everyday wear, and there are various designs in weaving. Some of the latest styles in silk stockings are shown here, too.

IN THE first place, before you ever wear a pair of silk stockings, wash them out in tepid water thoroughly and dry them. They should not be hung in the sun when drying, as that will affect the dye, as well as the fiber of the silk, nor should they be dried very rapidly, with very intense heat. Never wear a silk stocking but once. Then wash it, and if you want to get the most wear out of the stockings, wash them almost immediately upon taking them off. The moisture from your feet allowed to dry in the stockings, has a deteriorating effect on them. These little hints all come from a manufacturer of silk stockings who actually knows. They are used on a scientific knowledge of stockings, not on mere guesswork.

to try to dye your fur at home. This is very seldom successful, and you might ruin the fur so that it would not be fit to wear. Why don't you clean it with rubber, rubbing it with moist bran on a cloth until it is dry, then afterward with dry bran? Brush it out well afterward. This will freshen it up and may make the color brighter and prettier. But it would really pay you better to send it to a professional to have it dyed.

to Curl Ostrich Feathers, Dear Madam—How can ostrich and marabou feathers be curled? A. A. S., These feathers can be curled by pulling each strand over the edge of a knife, but this must be done very carefully. Perhaps the easiest way to curl them is to fasten them up over a radiator, so that the full strength of the hot air comes on them. This makes them curl right up.

What Dr. Wiley says about Milk, In his book—"Not By Bread Alone"—Dr. Wiley has this to say about Milk: "If I have to economize it will not be on the milk for my children. It will be on their clothing and schooling and expensive foods, and NOT on that staff of child-life—MILK." Milk is essential to the health of children, and doubly necessary for the under-nourished child. For milk helps to bring the child up to normal weight, thereby building up the power to resist disease.

Please Tell Me What to Do

By CYNTHIA

Writes to A. L. L. H., Dear Cynthia—I want to sympathize with and help, if possible, A. L. L. H. I don't think you lack courage, A. L. L. H. I think you are fortunate. It seems to me to be the highest proof of your love for the girl that you are unable to try to kiss her. Don't give yourself the idea that she is not confidential with you without making it necessary to lose any of her virtues. And don't worry about her making a business of her virtues. Let her treat you all her maidenly modesty and womanly self-respect. Consider that you are really the lucky man you are and help your girl to remain your ideal.

More Advice, A. L. L. H., Dear Cynthia—I want to answer A. L. L. H. The thing for him to do is to do just as I did and I am now married. If she treats him coldly just treat her the same way, and never tell her how much you love her; just keep her guessing, because, if you do tell her, she will make a monkey out of you. And about kissing her, that's easy. When you go to see her sit by her and tell her a good story to make her laugh. And when she is laughing and talking with you just put your arms around her and kiss her. If she loves you she won't mind it; she will only return it. I had the same trouble, and my wife used to be just like your sweet-heart. So just do as I say. I am about your age and my wife is your sweet-heart's age.

MARRIED—G. K. P. N., To Unhappy Wife, M.—I am very sorry about your case, and think you should do some definite thing to bring your husband to his senses.

Do not cry and let him see that you are worrying. If he is back home with you now be sure to dress attractively for dinner and suggest going out with him (first making arrangements with some friend to stay in the house with the babies while you are out). If he will not go, go yourself with some of your women friends and tell him you are going to the theatre, and go whether he protests or not. Let him have a night or two of sitting home and caring for the children. Have other times that of interesting things to talk about. Do not complain and, above all, do not mention the person of whom you wrote to me. Then when that person comes back here again, if he starts going out, let him come home to get his supper and change his clothes, but do not be there. Take the children and go out and do not let him find you or them in when he comes home. This may bring him to reason. Always be careful not to cry or reproach him. And try to be bright and attractive as you were when he courted you.

"Jack" Writes Again, Dear Cynthia—May I "butt in" to your column again? I couldn't resist writing to "Old Bachelor." Old man, I have been reading Cynthia's column steadily lately and I have noticed how all the girls and fellows have been "knocking" and "bawling you out" for what you write and "jazz" when you come to think of it, you deserved it. I don't like to say this, for in a

MARIAN DOES NOT LOVE THE MAN SHE IS TO MARRY

But She Insists That She Must Keep Her Promise—She Forgets That She Cannot Make Him Happy if She Is Unhappy

MARIAN, the sunny, bright-faced little girl, who has always been noted for her cheery smile and happy nature, has come to a serious crisis in her life. She is going to be married, and not long ago she discovered that she did not love the man she has promised to marry. They became engaged just before he went overseas. Now that he is home again and making plans to marry on, Marian has had time to think it over, and although she has nothing against him, she simply doesn't love him. But she insists that she will marry him. "I promised," she says, over and over, trying to convince herself, "and it's up to me to marry him. And I'll make him happy, even if I'm not happy myself." And so she goes on with the plans for her wedding, with the merry little face all drawn into resolute lines, the bright smile set and forced. Her excitement over the wedding arrangement is a little too marked, the interest in the soft white satin and tulle is a little too practical and impersonal. There's something missing in the feelings of this little bride-to-be, and she wonders why it is—even Jack, whom she is so determined to marry. And as time goes on Jack will notice that lack of something more and more. It will worry him. He will wonder whether there is something wrong about him. And so in time Marian's resolution I am partly responsible for your letter, for it was to me that you wrote it.

Will you let me (one who was fooled) give you a little advice? I said that I would never trust another girl, but I have thought the matter over and, old man, don't you think it would be foolish to let these girls who turned us down spoil the rest of our lives? There are plenty of good girls around, partner, and some day I hope to meet one, and I'm sure you will, too. So, "Old Bachelor," I ask you to sit down and think it over. I don't mean sit down in a trolley car and let the woman stand, though, old man, I am pretty sure you really didn't mean that. There is nothing in this life without a girl, old man, I know; I've tried it. I am a fellow who runs around a great deal to dances and balls, parties, shows and all that, but when you come to think of it, there's nothing in it, and I often dream of a different life, a little home and a wife to meet you at the door after a day's work and pleasant evenings together at home, and, boy, there's nothing to beat this life, I know. For I've tried the other. I think this over, "Old Bachelor," and I hope you come to the conclusion that I'm right, for, after all, old man, there's nothing more wonderful in this old world of ours, nothing you can value more than a good little girl. JACK.
