"HIGHER EDUCATION" MAIN LINERS' TARGET

Even Railroads Affected, but Co-eds "Get There" While Mere Outsiders Wait

Varied indeed are the evils of higher education! Even the running of a railroad is affected by it! And co-education at that!

Yesterday was Wednesday; it was also the day before Thanksgiving, a day when undergraduates throughout the country were flying, as fast as express trains could carry them, back to home and the turkey dinner.

The girls at Bryn Mawr College were among those in the general exodus. Most of them came via the Main Line locals to Philadelphia. The tragedy came when a very large proportion of them chose the 1:08 train. Possibly due to war conservation, the 1:08 train has only the minimum number of cars. The L. L.'s (Learned Lassies) filled most of the seats, and their bags and bundles filled the rest.

It was a very merry party, but you couldn't convince residents of Narberth, Merion and Overbrook of that fact. Haverford and Ardmoreites managed to squeeze aboard. But when it came to Narberth—oh my, oh my!

One or two intrepid ones crawled on, the rest stood around and clamored. It was the only train for a whole hour. Many of them had important business; all were cold and indignant.

They told the brakemen so. And the brakemen, after the way of all mankind, shifted the responsibility.

"It's all the fault of those darned (only they didn't say it just that way) Bryn Mawr girls," they protested.

Merion and Overbrook could not get aboard at all; not even in the baggage car. Business of the nation may have been upset, while angry men and women were left behind, but, anyway, in spite of everything else, those Bryn Mawr girls got safely home to mother and their turkey dinners.

Higher education had won.

Subway Tied Up 50 Minutes

A subway tieup near Twenty-fourth street shortly before midnight caused a delay of about fifty minutes. The trouble was caused by a short circuit. The subway surface cars were deflected to Market street and helped relieve the congestion in the central district caused by the after-theatre crowds.

DICKENS ON PHILADELPHIA

Novelist Thought City Slow on Visit Here in Last Century

"Philadelphia, the city of the dead," might well have been the title of a descriptive article of this city written by Charles Dickens, the great English novelist who visited here in 1842, according to Joseph F. A. Jackson, who spoke on "Dickens in Philadelphia" at the Dickens Fellowship last night.

Officers were nominated last night. The election will take place at the next meeting. Those nominated were Judge John M. Patterson, president; Thomas K. Ober, Thomas K. Ober, Jr., and Mrs. George Dobbins, vice presidents; W. L. Ruttle, treasurer and J. K. Thompson, secretary.

OFFER ART GALLERY SITE

Park Commission Will Also Furnish Part of Money

The Park Commission is willing to furnish a site on the Parkway for a municipal art gallery and guarantee a sum of money which, when added to the proceeds of the sale of the John G. Johnson home at 510 South Broad street, will pay for its erection.

Eli Kirk Price, vice president of the commission, made this known yesterday at a master's hearing on the Johnson will. M. Hampton Todd was the master. Mr. Price was answering an inquiry as to where the city would put the Johnson art collection if it secured it.
