THE DAILY NOVELETTE TIS NEVER TOO LATE By JENNIE LITTLE

A COMELY woman, nearing middleage, stepped out on the little cottage porch and shaded her eyes from the morning sun that she might look deeper and farther into the budding green mysteries of a perfect day. As her gaze wandered appreciably from the distant hills to the nearcr meadows and orchards their peace seemed reflected in her face. But when she glanced down at her own garden a quick frown accompanied an impatient exclamation; "That pesky dog again!
I declare it's enough to provoke a saint, which I never claimed to be. If there's one thing on earth more bothersome than another, it's neighbors who don't chare another, it's neighbors who don't chare two pins for other people's com-

"Yesterday he dug up my panstes, day before that 'twas my holly-hocks, but spoiling my tulips all in bloom is the last straw. I'm going to see that it's stopped!" And she shied a stick at the retreating pup, which cocked its ears innocently as it went wide of its mark before he disappeared under a high board fence.

Once upon a time before Miss Lydia's coming the path from her steps had run directly through that yard and the next, ending at the adjoining house and was a well-worn trail. But a little cloud had appeared on the friendly horizon, at first no bigger than a man's hand, and grew to such proportions that the spile fence had appeared to horizon, at first no bigger than a man's hand, and grew to such proportions that the spite fence had appeared to stop all intercourse.

However, two young folks lived on either side, and love laughs at fences as well as locksmiths, so just where the big maple stretched its branches over the top an almost invisible gate had been made and many a night had the lovers found it an ideal trysting place. But this was years ago, and the original owners had moved far away. The gate was fitted now with latch and hinges, but she had never used it, as the next house had been empty until lately, and then she had been disappointed to learn that it was only a lone bachelor who had taken the farm. But today with sudden determination But today with sudden determination
