The majority of service men in the world war did not know the marking of religion, but the conflict created a spirit of brotherland regardless of the Bislion Charles II, Bent, of the dio-rese of western New York, who was senior charling of the American expeditionary forces, made this comment to-day before leaving for Puntato. The bishop was the guest of George Whar-fon Pepner at the latter's home. ITEO Pipe street. He socke last night at a mass-meeting of Eoiscopalisms in the interest of the nation-wide campaign of the Church.

The bishor is a man of rugged per-sonality. His law is firm and his shoulders square. He wastes no time shoulders square. He wastes no time in useless phrasco'egy, but has the knack of getting to the noint with unquestionable logic. While he speaks forcefully, a twink's in his gray eyes bespeaks a geniul snirit.

Although the day had barely started when newspaper men called, the hishop was up and couly for action.

After touching on the subject of a broader education which would promote a greater Christianity, the bishon said: "The American nation has not denly with the influx of immigrants in the proper manner. We invite them here, but when they reach our shores we ignore them. They have alten minds because we do not make proper effort to educate them. Proper and vigozous of forts should be made to eliminate the Red element. Proper education would prevent the development of such an element in the first place."

The bishop then spoke of the negroes and how their welfare was neglected in some parts of the country. "We should Education Would Beat Reds
